Think of Service members

Members of the United States Armed Forces work around the clock and around the world to keep us safe and defend our freedom. But this can mean that they can be far away from their own loved ones. Special times of year like Christmas can be especially difficult.

This is why it is important for the rest of us to do what we can to show them how much we appreciate all that they do.

Any one of the following acts would make a kind addition to your family's holiday traditions.

SEND A CARE PACKAGE

Whether you are putting together a gift for a soldier you know or just want to show your gratitude to any soldier, assembling a care package is a great way to show those in the armed forces they are remembered and loved. If you are working through a service — there are several to choose from — be sure and check with their list of items you shouldn't pack, as well as their list of items most needed. Chapstick or sunscreen may not seem like a good gift to you but will be much appreciated.

VISIT WITH A VETERAN

Just because they've returned home doesn't automatically make the holidays easier. Take a stroll through your local VA hospital and strike up a conversation with someone. Veterans are at high risk for depression, anxiety and suicide, and visits help. Most hospitals have visiting programs, and staff are more than happy to pair you with a veteran who would love a visit.

HELP OTHERS HAVE A MERRY CHRISTMAS

Family members left at home are missing their service members, too. There are families in your community with an active service member away at Christmas. If you don't know any personally, ask around. Churches can be a great place to start. Reach out and perform one of the acts of kindness that came to your mind when you put yourself in those shoes — you may make the difference in someone's Christmas.
