A Bit of Correspondence.

Fosston, Minn., Jan. 15, 1900.—My Dear Molly.—After some hesitation with deep meditation and careful estimation of your wealth and reputation, I write this communication to unfold the information that by your wit and education, and your beauty and fascination you have without exaggeration excited my admiration to adoration. Now with a full appreciation of my own reputation I make this declaration and without further investigation I request a conversation with a view to a stipulation to change your situation by a marriage rite relation with Peter H. Potation.

To Miss Mollie Moderation.
P. S.—Please give this intimation your favorable consideration and should it meet your approbation and your final acceptance it will be an agrandization to the joy and exultation of Peter H. Potation.

Fosston, Minn., Jan. 16, 1900.
Dear Sir.—I have perused your oration with care and deliberation and I hasten a replication to your queer communication. It was my first consideration that it was a vain inclination to display your education by an old enumeration of words of like determination though different signification. But after a reconsideration I have made some investigation of your character and station and have gained the information that you use a stimulation and not in moderation but to the extent of intoxication. Now without hesitation I express my detestation of such dissipation by pronounced condemnation on such vacuous degradation as below the brute creation. And with due appreciation of your wealth and education under no consideration would I change my appellation from Mollie Moderation, to Peter H. Potation.

An Artificial Tongue.

Science has enabled a man to go through life with an artificial nose and limbs that often defy detection, but one of the most novel inventions of modern surgery is a tongue made of rubber and resting on a pivot set between the teeth. There is a man in this city who can show this wonderful mechanism and who feels very happy because he has it. This man is George Henderson. He is 47 years old and for many years had been an inveterate smoker; often using 15 cigars a day. Excessive use of tobacco caused a cancer of the tongue, and the organ had to be removed. This operation was most difficult and was performed in Bellevue Hospital last February.

It was necessary to saw through the lower jaw at the center and remove two lower front teeth, together with a portion of the jawbone on either side of these teeth. When this was done the surgeons removed two-thirds of the anterior part of the tongue, leaving only the base of the organ. The severed ends of the jaw were united with wire.

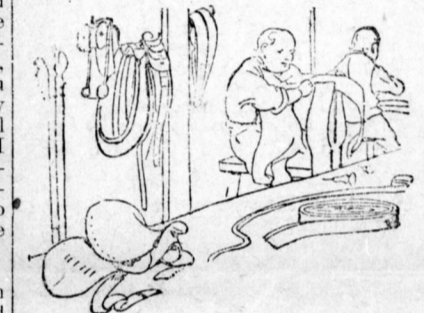

Henderson then left the hospital, the surgeons giving him little hope of ever being able to eat solid food. The base of the tongue healed in a few weeks, but in spite of the care with which the surgeons adjusted the wire about the patient had worn this for five weeks it was removed, and it was found that the severed parts of the jaw had reunited.

Mr. Henderson finally went to the New York College of dentistry, where Dr. Frederick Bradley took charge of his case. He sawed through the jaw again and adjusted its sides evenly, bringing them in as close impact as possible. A metal cap was placed over all of the lower teeth and held in position by a clamp on either side of the mouth fastened under the chin. After the patient had worn this for five weeks it was removed, and it was found that the severed parts of the jaw had reunited.

Henderson was still unable to eat solid food, because he had no tongue to pass it back into the esophagus. To overcome this difficulty the surgeon constructed an artificial tongue.

A rim of gold was made to fit the inner surface of the lower teeth. This was bevelled off toward the lower edge and attached to a wire clasp which fitted over one of the back teeth on either side. A bar of German silver was fastened across the mouth from one of the back teeth to another opposite. This was enclosed in a tube of the same metal of sufficient size to permit it to rotate easily on the bar. A tongue of red vulcanized rubber was made to fit about the tube. The rear of the rubber tongue was bevelled off toward the bottom and placed under the base of the real tongue, so that the least movement of the muscles presses down upon the rubber, throwing the tongue up.

Henderson is now able to talk as distinctly and freely as he ever did, and eats with ease and freedom.—New York Herald.
