

A PROMINENT LADY

Speaks in Highest Terms of Peruna as a Catarrh Cure.

Mrs. M. A. Theatro, member Rebecca Lodge, Iola Lodge, also member of Woman's Relief Corps, writes the following letter from 1333 Jackson street, Minneapolis, Minn.:

Mrs. M. A. Theatro, Minneapolis, Minn.

Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, O. Gentlemen: "As a remedy for catarrh I can cheerfully recommend Peruna. I have been troubled with chronic catarrh for over six years. I had tried several remedies without relief. A lodge friend advised me to try Peruna, and I began to use it faithfully before each meal. Since then I have always kept it in the house. I am now in better health than I have been in over twenty years, and I feel sure my catarrh is permanently cured."

Peruna cures catarrh wherever located. As soon as Peruna removes systemic catarrh the digestion becomes good, nerves strong, and trouble vanishes. Peruna strengthens weak nerves, not by temporarily stimulating them, but by removing the cause of weak nerves—systemic catarrh. This is the only cure that lasts. Remove the cause; nature will do the rest. Peruna removes the cause. Address The Peruna Medicine Company, Columbus, Ohio, for a book treating of Catarrh in its different phases and stages, also a book entitled "Health and Beauty," written especially for women.

HOW, WHOM, WHEN TO KISS.

No Longer Good Form to Kiss on the Lips, It Is Said—The Duty of Mothers.

And now even kissing is being reduced to a science! Once upon a time when people wanted to kiss, they just kissed, and that was all the fuss there was about it. Now all this is changed. The woman who wants to be absolutely "correct" in kissing, as she is in the selection of her hats or gowns, stockings or petticoats, must kiss according to rule. "It is no longer good form," we are assured by one of these newly-fledged authorities on polite osculation, "to kiss even your dearest friend on the lips. That kiss is sacred to lovers and to husbands and wives. In polite society, the kiss upon each cheek is now the accepted form of greeting between friends and relatives. When women are about the same age, either one may offer the caress, but between a young woman and an older woman, the younger must proffer her lips and the older will gracefully turn her cheek to receive the kiss. Then, if the older woman desires to be exceedingly gracious, she may, in turn, kiss the younger; but there is no discourtesy if she turns the other cheek and becomes the recipient of the second kiss. "Under no circumstances must the younger woman turn her cheek for the first kiss. This is a pretty little act of deference on her part, but to force her senior to give her the kiss is distinct rudeness. The well-bred woman is always cordial, but never effusive in her caresses. She is also chary of them. Promiscuous kissing is in bad taste. Of course, to kiss even one's nearest relative in the street is not permissible. A woman who is the possessor of self-respect and dignity will take care that her kisses are not meaningless. "There are several reasons why the kiss upon the lips has become obsolete, the principal one being that it is unhygienic. Especially is it bad for children to be kissed upon the lips by their elders. Mothers who study health, never kiss their own children in this way, and is careful that the nurse does not show her love for her little charge. Kisses may be pressed upon a child's cheek, brow, eyes chin or neck, but never on the mouth. A hurried kiss is always an insult. Some women put off the good-bye kiss until the last moment, and then give it in a peck on the cheek. The proper way to give a kiss is to press your lips lightly but firmly, against the cheek, and let them rest there for an instant. There must not be anything suggestive of a smack. —Philadelphia Times.

Identified.

"Max Muller is dead," remarked the Literary Man. "Who was Max Muller?" gruffly inquired the Sordid Politician. "He was a brother to Maud Muller," answered the Literary Man, with a pained expression on his face. "O, I see!" said the Sordid Politician, "the girl that raked the hay?" "Yes," said the Literary Man, "he drove the horse-rake while Maud was flirting with the Judge. He was the one for whom she was figuring on buying a broadcloth coat if she had caught the Judge."—Buffalo Express.

To Amuse the Horse.

A Paris hackman, hailed by a countryman who was dressed in a style well calculated to make the city chaps laugh, shrugged his shoulders, and was about to drive on, when the countryman shouted to him: "What, you refuse to take me, although you are not engaged?" "Well, no," said cabby, "I'll take you, just to amuse the poor old horse."—Exchange.

Perseverance often accomplishes more than power.

Experiences with Bloat. F. B. Linfield, of the Utah Experiment Station, has the following to say of their experiences with bloat, when feeding cows on alfalfa (lucerne): A very great drawback to pasture feeding in this state is the trouble with bloat when there is any lucerne in the pasture. I have seen something of the trouble with bloat in the east where clover was pastured, yet it can hold no comparison with the danger from loss on alfalfa or lucerne. I presume there are thousands of dollars lost in the state every year from this trouble, and with very many farmers lucerne is discarded entirely as a pasture fodder, because of the danger to cows or sheep from feeding upon it. It might be of value to others to record here a little of our experience with bloat during the past five or six years. Our practice in feeding has been to let the pasture get a good start in the spring before the cows are turned upon it. It must not be forgotten that the pasture is made up of quite a variety of grasses, so that the cows have a large number to select from when turned out. The cows are always well filled up on dry hay before being turned on the pasture, and for the first two or three days a man is kept with them continually, provided with a stimulant, and with a trocar and canula. The stimulant we have used to advantage in the early stages of bloat is a tablespoonful of turpentine in a quart of linseed oil. When once started on the pasture the cows are kept on it continuously night and day, and they have the run of the whole pasture. An irrigation stream is constantly running through the pasture, so that the cows never have to leave the field except for a short time twice a day, when they are driven into the corral to be milked. Under the management above described we have had animals bloat slightly, but have lost but one from this cause in six years, and that resulted from a transgression of our usual practice. There is considerable lucerne in the pasture. I cannot say that like favorable results will always follow from the management described above, but at least the results are encouraging. I want in this connection to note an exception. There was one cow in the herd that we could not safely pasture. Whether she had been in the habit of bloating before we purchased her I do not know, though I am inclined to think she had. We tried her on the pasture for a few months, but finally had to take her off and feed her in the stable on green soiling crops, generally lucerne. When fed in the stable on the green, though slightly witted lucerne, we had no trouble with the cow till in the fall after the lucerne was frozen. It would seem that we would be justified in drawing the conclusion: first, that as some cows are more subject to bloat than others, therefore the condition of the digestive apparatus of the cow has some relation to the cause of the trouble. In the second place, fresh lucerne, in the field, seems to be more dangerous than that which is partly witted. The difference in its effects, however, may be due to the fact that the lucerne which was cut and fed in the stable was more matured than that in the pasture. When the cows have the run of the mixed grass pasture, with an abundant water supply always available, and the cows are kept on the pasture continuously, night and day, the danger of bloat seems to be reduced to a minimum if care is exercised in starting them on the pasture in the spring.

Jersey Seal of Points.

C. A. Rosebrough asks us how to tell a Jersey calf. The following are some of the points of the Jersey cow: Head.—Small and lean; face dished, broad between the eyes and narrow between the horns. Eyes.—Full and placid. Neck.—Thin, rather long, with clean throat and not heavy at the shoulders. Back.—Level to the setting on of tail. Loins.—Broad across. Barrel.—Long, hooped, broad and deep at the flank. Hips.—Wide apart; rump long. Legs.—Short. Tail.—Fine, reaching the hocks, with good switch. Hide.—Mellow; inside of ears yellow.

As to whether a calf is a high grade or full-blood there is no particular way to tell. A full-blooded calf may not always have all the conformity of the Jersey pure bred, while a high-grade, on account of the prepotency of the Jersey blood in him, might not show the small proportion of alien blood.

Maturity of Hogs.

Hogs vary to an astonishing degree as to the time in which they will mature. We hear yet of breeders that claim to have hogs that go on growing till they are five or six years old, but course of breeding in modern times has tended to eradicate this late maturing habit. Now most of our swine reach maturity in a little over a year and reach a marketable growth in ten months or less. For breeding animals it is advocated that the hogs be fed so that they will mature rapidly and make their growth during two years, it being argued that such hogs will have more vitality to transmit to their offspring.

Silk for Fishing Lines.

The production of what is known as silk-worm gut for fishing lines is a curious industry that has followed the decline of silk culture in the vicinity of Murcia, Spain. The grub is fed on the usual mulberry leaves, but before it begins to spin is drowned in vinegar, and the substance that would have formed the cocoon is drawn from the body as a thick silken thread. These threads are treated with chemicals, dried, put up in bundles of 100 and sold along the Mediterranean.

Bagging a Peer's Calf.

The moors of Yorkshire and Scotland have been alive with shooters. The crack of the gun has been heard on every hand, for grouse-shooting has opened for the year. During the shooting season in Great Britain accidents are comparatively rare, considering the first-class opportunities to blow off a companion's head or drill a hole in his back. But such accidents do happen, and the first man to be shot this season was Lord Binning. The noble lord is a bit of a wag, and even when his leg was perforated with shot from his own gun, and he was sitting against a hedge waiting for a stretcher to be brought, his wit did not desert him, for, as the doctor was binding up his wounds, he remarked: "I came out to kill grouse—but, 'pon my soul, I seem to have bagged a calf."—Saturday Evening Post.

"Oh! Dear I'm so Tired."

The ordinary every-day life of most of our women is a ceaseless treadmill of work.

How much harder the daily tasks become every moment derangement of the female organs makes every movement painful and keeps the nervous system all unstrung!

One day she is wretched and utterly miserable; in a day or two she is better and laughs at her fears, thinking there is nothing much the matter after all; but before night the deadly backache reappears, the limbs tremble, the lips twitch—it seems as though all the imps of Satan were clutching her vitals; she goes to pieces and is flat on her back.

No woman ought to arrive at this terrible state of misery, because these symptoms are a sure forerunner of womb troubles. She must remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is almost an infallible cure for all female ills, such as irregularity of periods, which cause weak stomach, sick headache, etc., displacements and inflammation of the womb, or any of the multitudes of illnesses which beset the female organism.

Mrs. Gooden wrote to Mrs. Pinkham when she was in great trouble. Her letter tells the result.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I am very grateful to you for your kindness and the interest you have taken in me, and truly believe that your medicines and advice are worth more to a woman than all the doctors in the world. My troubles began with inflammation and hemorrhages from the kidneys, then inflammation, congestion and falling of the womb, and inflammation of the ovaries. I underwent local treatment every day for some time; then, after nearly two months, the doctor gave me permission to go back to work. I went back, but in less than a week was compelled to give up and go to bed. On breaking down the second time, I decided to let doctors and medicines alone and try your remedies. Before the first bottle was gone I felt the effects of it. Three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and a package of Sanative Wash did me more good than all the doctors' treatments and medicine I have gained twelve pounds during the last two months and am better in every way. Thanking you for your kind advice and attention, I remain, Yours gratefully, "MRS. E. J. GOODEN, Ackley, Iowa."

Owing to the fact that some skeptical people have from time to time questioned the genuineness of the testimonial letters we are constantly publishing, we have deposited with the National City Bank, of Lynn, Mass., $1,000, which will be paid to any person who will show that the above testimonial is not genuine, or was published before obtaining the writer's special permission.—LYDIA E. "Um—let me see—L don't just recall his name, but I was there the year Jinks played halfback on the football team and kicked a goal twice from the field in the last half of..." "Oh, sure; of course. That was the year our center rush carried most of the opposing team on his back for a gain of thirty yards. Yes, indeed. I wonder who was president then. I do not seem to remember minor details of college life myself."—Chicago Post.
