BUSH SWEET POTATOES.

Interesting Facts About Sweet Potatoes Growing in New Jersey.

The reputation of New Jersey sweet potatoes is well established, and one of the widely known varieties is the Jersey Yellow. A correspondent of Rural New Yorker tells that there are a number of local strains of this whose peculiarities lie principally in their shape, color and keeping quality. Among these is the Vineland Bush, which seems to be a true bush form of the Jersey Yellow. This writer says: We grew some of them last season and found them to be productive, of good yellow color and desirable shape. They form a thick bushy top of rich dark green leaves and not a sign of a runner. The leaves are of the same shape as the Jersey Yellow, but rather larger. They are as easy to cultivate and hoe as bush beans, and there are no vines in the way at digging time. The quality is very much like the Jersey Yellow. We have grown so called vineless sweets, but they are all more or less of the yam family. The Vineland Bush is a true sweet potato.

Soil, method of culture and season have much to do with shape, color and quality of sweet potatoes. It is a well known fact that where they have been grown in favorable soil for many years their habit of growth becomes to some extent fixed in the seed, and they will retain that habit for a year or more when planted on quite different soil. A large sweet potato grower in Iowa writes me: "We buy Jersey Yellow seed, which at first grows short and chunky, but after a year or two they grow longer, and then we call them Yellow Nansmonds." Thus they change name as well as shape. The seed—the small or medium potatoes—are first bedded in a hotbed one-half to one inch apart and covered three inches deep. In about four weeks the sprouts should be well up and rooted, when they are pulled and set where the soil has been previously prepared.

BUSH SWEET POTATO.

The ground is first plowed lightly, as deep plowing tends to produce long potatoes. Some growers plant in hills, others on ridges. Usually light furrows are run about three feet apart, in which the fertilizer, which should be rich in potash, is sown at the rate of one-half ton per acre. Ridges (or hills) are made directly over this either with a ridger or small plow. The plants are set on the ridge 18 inches or more apart. There are several forms of hand planters in use as well as the two horse machine, but many farmers still set with the hand or trowel. Plants should never be set until the weather is warm, about melon planting time. If the soil is dry, a little water is put in as the plant is set, which insures a good start. Some planters always water. Frequent cultivation and clean hoeing are essential to success. Nearly all growers now use cultivators with vine turners on, which keep the vines upon the ridge through the season.

LACE CURTAINS.

Their Durability Depends Much Upon Processes of Cleaning.

There are many and bitter complaints of the poor wearing qualities of lace curtains as compared with those that "lasted for years in the times of our grandmothers." Complainers often insist that the quality has deteriorated and that there are no such goods made as those bearing date of 40 years ago, many of which are even yet in a more presentable condition than our own, that have passed through perhaps two or three cleanings in as many years.

The reason for this is more than any other one thing the difference in the process of cleaning, says a leading critic. In suburban localities, where the modern professional cleaner is unknown, it is altogether probable that the curtains last as long as ever. They are carefully washed under the personal supervision of the housekeeper or by her own hands, are put upon the grass to bleach and when sufficiently clear are rinsed and starched, not too stiff, for that might cause them to break, but just enough to make them look new. They are then neatly and regularly pinned down upon the parlor carpet and left to dry with locked doors to keep out intruders and open windows to let in the air. When taken up, they are almost if not altogether as good looking as new and have suffered little if any injury during the process. Treated in this way tampered lace curtains will last until the owners are wearied with seeing them around and get new ones for variety.

The modern process is very different. The curtain is put into a large caldron, with scarcely water enough to cover it, and is boiled in the strongest bleaching chemicals. It is slightly rinsed and stiffly starched. If it is torn or the threads are broken, a section of net lace is dipped in thick starch or paste and laid over the broken spot, which has been partly closed by being drawn together with very fine thread. The net is then pressed upon the curtain with such force as to unite them like one fabric. The curtains are then dried, folded and sent home to be put up.

Window Seats.

The windows in the drawing rooms in the days of Chippendale and Sheraton were tall and narrow. They were set between the deep reveals which contained the folded shutters, says Furniture and Decorator. These windows generally gave upon small iron balconies, and the orthodox middle class drawing room of those days contained three such attenuated openings in the wall opposite the entrance door. The window side of the room was therefore usually furnished with narrow mirrors and console tables fitted between the windows, while simple draperies and three dainty window seats completed that end of the apartment. Window seats were consequently of considerable importance in those times, and Chippendale and his dainty successors gave careful designs for such comfortable articles in their published works. Nowadays, however, window seats are rather admired for the sake of their unusualness than for any real merit they may possess as useful articles of furniture.
