NBC's America's Got Talent could be a future stop for the half-dozen Clinton teens who stepped up their skills at Mississippi College's summer music camp.

In the TV show's twelfth season, judges like Howie Mandel and Simon Cowell are sizing up performers each week. It's not much of a leap for MC music campers to get the chance to audition some day and appear on a national stage.

Of the thirty-five young people who came to Mississippi College for a five-day residential music camp, several Clintonians made the short drive to learn.

A Jackson Academy student, Gabi Jones practically grew up at MC's summer music camp. It was her sixth summer of enhancing her musical abilities on the Clinton campus. Award-winning MC music professors served as her instructors.

The seventeen-year-old daughter of MC history instructor Missy Jones, Jones seeks to develop her vocal skills. In addition, she wants to get better at playing the ukulele.

Music lovers are familiar with popular ukulele tunes like "Over the Rainbow." It's an instrument that works quite well for the daughter of Missy and Paul Jones.

"I have small hands, so a ukulele works well."

A homeschooled student from Clinton, Isabel Lueck, seventeen, is passionate about improving her performances on the violin.

"I like the many tones it makes," said Lueck, who came back for a second season at MC summer
