It would not be that uncommon to find as many women watching the Turkev Day ballgames as men. But again, it was a changeable thing; you did that for a while then moved on.

I will always remember the year that Uncle Billy and Aunt Delores Honn hosted Thanksgiving as we were going to host Christmas for a change of pace. Their house on Illinois Street, which is not there but the house of it was with laughter so it Marilu and Hewitt Hafer is. was okay. The Bears were playing Detroit this Thanksgiving. It was the typical day as I've described, but our beloved Bears were on the comeback trail! On the last play of the game, the Bears scored a touchdown and kicked an extra point to tie the score.

The Bears won the overtime coin toss and elected to receive. Sean Payton, younger brother to Bears hero Walter Payton, was receiving. At this point, nearly every Honn of any stripe or inlawed stripe was in the room with the game on. The less well-known Payton caught the ball and was off racing down the field for a touchdown as the Illinois Street house erupted into shouts, people jumping up and down, napkins being torn up for confetti, and TV trays being banged on to emphasize the drama!

If you drive by there today this Thanksgiving, roll down the window and stop for a moment, I bet you can still hear the commotion as it surely must linger like a cloud over the property.

It wasn't all football pandemonium on those Thursdays. There was always a card table set up with a jigsaw puzzle resolution in progress. Not just any jigsaw usually, but a ridiculously hard jigsaw puzzle. At times maybe two would be working on the puzzle, while the rest were yelling at the football gether--or, alternately, trying to keep the younger children from stealing pieces so they could claim the honor of putting the final piece in the puzzle. The Sears Tower probably had fewer engineers than these jigsaw puzzles did. Plus, the puzzle was approached with the same kind of gusto as the football viewing. Lots of laughter, shouting, maybe a few un-Thanksgiving like phrases dropped. I love my family for the memories of jigsaw puzzle pandemonium that surely makes us one of a kind.

Finally, at some point there would be music. The electric organ would be turned on, and cousin Mike, almost always, would do the honors playing. Everyly a few but other times the whole of the house.

It was spirited, it was hilarious, it was often quite her brood, her family, her beautiful. We were kind of loved ones. She was the one like the Whos in Whoville, of the great noodles, the sugheart to heart and hand in ar cookies, and the Kentucky hand. One particular rendition, and this may not have cooked, she ate, she "jigeven been at Thanksgiving, was the "12 Days of Christmas." There were actions in- really knew. She was in the volved to go with each of the days. We do have pictures, and to be honest, everyone ing every minute. She was looks a little bit insane--but Throughout the playsecond "coursing" sat a little white haired lady. Not silently mind you as this was mints. She was "Mom." She sawed," and sang with us all. The only grandparent I ever mix with her family living life to the fullest and enjoyproud of the pandemonium!

And that's "30" today For the holidays!
