

WISE AND OTHERWISE

By Kent A. Stock

What is this Discount of which you speak?

I dug this out of the Wise and Otherwise archives. Hope you enjoy!

Have you ever had an innocuous question tossed at you out of the blue that just leaves you stammering? Of course I sometimes get stumped when people ask my name and address. The mind just goes blank but this is a little different, I was not sure how to respond appropriately.

In line at the grocery store, my items were scanned and bagged when the very young (aren't there child labor laws around here?) asked me if I wanted the Senior Citizens Discount. I did one of those look around things first as if she must be talking to someone else. Nope she is looking right at me so I did my usual stuttering and stammering gibberish before going to my last resort when I am uncomfortable or confounded – ma-niacal laughter.

I asked her “how old do you think I am?” which was stupid because she obviously thinks I'm old enough for the discount. “Is it the gray hair?” I ask still laughing like a hyena which I'm sure made the check-out girl, who was probably 20 after all but kids these days look so young, think “you are not just old but crazy.” I continued my fun banter about age which probably did offend the lady two carts back who was at least 117.

I'm doing all this because I panic thinking do I look 65? 60? 55? Amazingly enough as we age I don't think I look that age at all. Other people do but not me! Just kidding so now I am holding up the line of the rest of us old fogies trying to understand this inquiry which had thrown me for a loop when I saw the sign – Senior Citizen Discount 50 and over.

I suddenly felt better about her question but worse about my reaction. So, to make matters worse, I then go on to explain that I'll be 50 in ten months. Oh, and I apologized but I was still chortling as she started helping me put things in the cart. I'm sure if she'd had a panic button she would have pressed it by now so she thought get the loony bird out of my line, 49 or a!
