

Free preservation workshops offered April 21

Want to keep your family heirlooms safe and beautiful for generations to come?

The Cookeville History Museum is hosting free family treasures preservation workshops April 21. Participants may call 520-5455 to register for the following time slots: 10-11:30 a.m., 12:30-2 p.m. or 2:30-4 p.m. Each session is limited to 10 people.

"In these small group workshops, you'll learn how to safely archive your family's photos, art pieces, textiles, metals, glass, ceramics, leather goods and more," Beth Thompson, Cookeville museums manager, said. "You'll also take home a free information packet for future reference and some archival materials to help you get started."

The workshops – a partnership between Cookeville Leisure Services, Tennessee Tech University Archives and Putnam County Library – tie into Preservation Week, which is observed nationally. The focus is on preserving domestic treasures in the home, whether it's a painting, sculpture or Grandma's quilt.

"These items are irreplaceable," she said, noting that different materials require different preservation methods. "They're the only ones you have or will have, so it's super important to preserve them so you can pass them down."

Ashley McKee, museums educational specialist, said, "Each object has a story. If you don't preserve those things, the story could get lost."

Participants may bring photos to the workshop but should leave larger items at home.

Pam Philpot, exhibit specialist, looks forward to sharing preservation tips with the community.

"We do this every day at the museum, and it's good to get the information out," she said. "We can show you ways to preserve your treasures longer than by just putting them in the back of your closet."

TTU archivist Megan Atkinson has provided archival gloves and photo sleeves for each participant to take home.

The Cookeville History Museum is located at 40 E. Broad St.

Reynolds elected state VP of STAR

Ashley Reynolds was recently elected FCCLA (Family, Career and Community Leaders of America) state vice president of STAR (Students Taking Action with Recognition) Events for the upcoming year. Reynolds, a junior and current chapter president of FCCLA at DCHS, competed for the honor at the recent state leadership meeting held in Chattanooga, March 21-23. In addition to her active campaigning during the 3-day event, Reynolds was also required to complete a detailed application, an oral interview and a written test.

In her new position, Reynolds will serve her chapter and the state association in various duties relating to the many and varied competitive STAR events held by FCCLA. For the past two years, Reynolds has competed in the Advocacy STAR event, focusing on the topics of teen pregnancy and the dangers of texting while driving. During last year's national competition, Reynolds brought home the silver award.

"We want to congratulate Ashley and support her as she represents her chapter, school and community across the state and nation as a state officer," DCHS FCCLA adviser Linda Parris said. "Our records indicate that Ashley is the first state officer elected from DCHS since the organization changed its name in 1999 from Future Homemakers of America. If anyone has knowledge of a state officer being elected from DeKalb County prior to this time, please let me know." Parris may be contacted at: lindaparris@dekalbschools.net.
