Stuff the bus July 27-29

The community is invited to make the beginning of school brighter both for teachers and for students as Walmart and the DeKalb School bus system are teaming up to "stuff the bus" with school supplies during tax free weekend.

"Anything we can do to help the kids," said Jimmy Sprague of the school system bus service. "They are our future and sometimes it's hard for people who are in a single parent home to be able to afford school supplies and back to school clothes."

Sprague said the bus will be parked in front of Walmart during tax free weekend July 27-29. Everyone is asked to make a donation of school supplies. The donations will actually be collected inside the store. The supplies will then be distributed to students and teachers for their classrooms at the area schools.

"Walmart has always been great to our community," Sprague said. "This is a win-win deal."

DeKalb County Fire Department Liberty Station #65 wants to say to everyone that participated in our fundraiser. From the cooks, the servers, people that made desserts and everyone that helped with the auction. To all the merchants and individuals who donated items and money, and to DeKalb West School for letting us use the school. Most of all, to all the citizens that came out and supported us. Without you, it would not have been possible! Again, Liberty Station #65 thanks you for your support!

THANK YOU

Street dancer arrested

DUANE SHERRILL

Smithville, Tennessee

Police saved a man from being run over as he was dancing in the street, later charging him with disorderly conduct for his hazardous selection of dance floors.

The man, Nathan Joseph Wilbert, 38, is charged with disorderly conduct and resisting stop.

The incident began when Smithville police started receiving calls about a man dancing in the road and yelling at passing cars on West Broad Street. "He was angry and belligerent and throwing his arms up in the air," the police report reads.

WILBERT

Officers tried to get him out of traffic but saw a sharp black object in his hands. "He was instructed multiple times to drop the object," the report reads. "He then clinched the metal object in his hand, held it like a knife and started yelling more."

Police tried to take Wilbert but missed. He then ran into traffic. "One of the officers grabbed him by his waist to protect him from getting hit by an oncoming car and both fell to the ground," the report revealed.

Wilbert was taken into custody and it was discovered the object he had been clutching was a metal paint scraper. The police officer who saved him from getting hit suffered abrasions to his knee.

Mayor Poss had already been censured by the city's board of aldermen for his handling of the hiring of his son, which he did without board approval. Anthony Poss was reportedly hired by his father to maintain the golf course and country club facilities owned by the city. However, members of the city board confronted the mayor, some noting there was no proof Anthony worked the hours for which he was paid. Others pointed out RiverWatch had been hired to do the same thing

Anthony Poss was reportedly hired to do, making the hiring a duplication of services.

Mayor Poss did not show up for special meetings called by the city board, during which they ultimately decided to publicly reprimand him, stopping short of filing suit for repayment of the city money paid to Anthony Poss between August 2017 through 2018. The mayor did send a prepared statement to the board the night of the censure.

"I want the council and the public to understand that my only goal was to safeguard and maintain the equipment located at the golf course," he said in his prepared statement. "I want to assure you that it wasn't a waste of the city's funds because the equipment must be maintained and my son was the most logical choice. In hindsight, his hiring without council approving may have been a mistake."

The total amount he earned was $8,100.

The pair are set to appear for arraignment on Aug. 6. Mayor Poss is presently in the middle of a campaign for reelection.
