

Highway Department to complete the circle

Animal Control driveway drama coming to close

The drive at Warren County Animal Control and Adoption Center has come full circle.

During a county Highway and Bridge Committee meeting, Road Superintendent Levie Glenn was given the green light to finish a connection between the upper and lower driveways, which will create a circle drive for the facility's employees and its visitors.

"I would have to shape it up, groom it a little better," said Glenn. "I told them we've put rip rap in there. I wanted the committee to look at it before I touched it. I felt like it needed more grooming. It was roughed in."

During the full Warren County Commission meeting Jan. 22, Commissioner Terry Bell asked if Glenn's department could be reimbursed by Animal Control for its expenses.

Not possible, said Highway and Bridge chair Commissioner Gary Prater.

"What was brought up at the meeting was he (Glenn) go out there and fix the drive and Animal Control reimburse him," said Prater. "He can't legally do that. He can do that job, but he can't be paid for it. No money can change hands."

Glenn says he's willing to help Animal Control director Kim Pettrey.

"I know she does struggle at times," said Glenn. "She's dedicated to her job and she tries real hard. It takes a special person to do what she does. A lot of commissioners should go in there. I did when they had 100 cats. She deserves all the help she can get. I want to help her and do what I can do."

One caveat was given.

"There may still be drainage issues," said Glenn. "I don't know if we can help it a little bit or not. We can try. I'll start as soon as the ground dries out, with your approval."

Committee members unanimously approved the request.

Mayor says tax dollars didn't support her affair

NASHVILLE (AP) — Nashville Mayor Megan Barry believes she and the former head of her security detail never attempted to use taxpayer dollars to support their extramarital affair, a spokesman said Monday.

After revealing last week she had an affair with Sgt. Robert Forrest, Barry's office produced more travel records and further responded to scrutiny about her trips in a statement Monday. The affair began several months after Barry assumed office in September 2015 and it's now over, she said, though she has side-stepped questions about how long it lasted.

The TBI is looking into any potential violations of criminal law, with focus on misappropriation of public funds and official misconduct. Nashville's city council is also considering forming an investigative committee with subpoena power.

In a news release Monday, spokesman Sean

Braisted said Barry stayed an extra night or two in cities where she traveled for official business on a handful of occasions, and covered the hotel herself or stayed with family.

Nashville taxpayer dollars were used for Sgt. Robert Forrest to stay those extra nights in a separate hotel room because Barry's official schedule would soon resume in that city, Braisted said.

On four nights of that variety from 2017, Forrest didn't record on-duty hours that would've resulted in pay or overtime, Braisted said.
