School volunteers improve the lives of students and ease the burden on teachers.

Warren County Schools recognized Herman Workman, a grandparent volunteer, for his assistance in manning the concession stand during home games at Morrison

School.

According to Morrison teacher Tina Smith, who made the nomination, it didn't take much coaxing on her part to receive help from Workman.

"He is the grandparent of a student in my class," said Smith. "I mentioned to him that I needed some help running and organizing the concession stand at Morrison for all the home games. He immediately started helping me the very next day."

Workman proved why grandparents are the great, says Smith.

"He is very reliable. He worked every junior varsity game beginning in September and most of the varsity games ending in January. He counted money, organized the inventory, and reminded others when to work and when they were to be there. He spent countless hours helping me set up and close the concession stand. Our school would not have been as successful having food for our games or raising money for our teams without his help. He is very deserving of this award."

Workman is also a member of the school's Parent Advisory Board.
