

Sexting

Under current Tennessee law, minors sending and receiving sexually suggestive photos could be labeled as sex offenders for involvement with child pornography. In fact, this one mistake could place the minor on the sex offender registry until age 25, which means he or she would be required to report this on all college or job applications. In an effort to prepare parents, protect kids, or rescue them from toxic online activity, a free adult workshop entitled "Winning A Generation" will be held Saturday, May 5 from 9 to 11 a.m. at Westwood Church of Christ. The guest speakers will be husband and wife duo Jesse and Sara Siegand. Coffee and light breakfast items will be provided. So why go? Organizers say the best way to protect your child is to prepare your child and the best way to prepare your child is to prepare yourself. Chad High, principal at Granbery Elementary School in Brentwood said, "The presentation is one all parents must see. They do an effective job communicating the urgency of why we need to protect our kids while online. I left this workshop with strategies and resources to immediately start fighting the battle in my home."

Whittaker

However, when she turned over the incriminating documents, it was discovered she had also been stealing from Cumberland Bonding. Her belief she would not be charged because she was turning in her stepfather was misguided. Carpenter noted their job was to sign bonds for those who could pay to get out of jail on bail. They would keep the money instead of turning it over to the bonding company. "There were many people who were out on bond that Cumberland had no idea were out because the bonding agents didn't turn in the paperwork or money," said Carpenter. It was determined Whittaker stole $30,210, while the two combined to steal around $43,000. The judicial diversion would have erased the criminal charge from her record had Whittaker abided by the terms of her three-year probation period.
