Lethal injections upheld

NASHVILLE (AP) — A Tennessee judge has upheld the state's use of controversial drugs to execute inmates after a challenge by 33 inmates on death row. Federal public defender Kelley Henry, one of the lawyers representing the inmates, said the plaintiffs will appeal. In his ruling on Thursday, Davidson County Chancellor Ellen Hobbs Lyle said the inmates failed to meet two necessary bars, The Tennessean reports. Lyle ruled the lawyers didn't prove there is a substantially less painful means to carry out the execution. "Although dreadful and grim, it is the law that while surgeries should be pain-free, there is no constitutional requirement for that with executions," Lyle wrote, echoing an argument made by attorneys for the state. The state had used pentobarbital, a barbiturate, but manufacturers have largely stopped selling the drug to anyone using it for executions. The inmates filed suit in February. They did not argue against the death penalty but focused on the use of midazolam. Experts who testified on the inmates' behalf said midazolam is often ineffective, leaving people awake and aware of the acidic poison that kills them, using examples from executions across the country.

Children reunited with their families

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Shy children were given a meal and a plane or bus ticket to locations around the U.S. as nonprofit groups tried to smooth the way for kids reunited with their parents following their separations at the U.S.-Mexico border. The Trump administration said more than 1,800 children 5 years and older had been reunited with parents or sponsors hours before the deadline Thursday. That included 1,442 children who were returned to parents who were in U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement custody, and another 378 who were released under a variety of other circumstances. But about 700 more remain separated, including 431 whose parents were deported, officials say. Those reunions take more time, effort and paperwork as authorities fly children back to Guatemala, El Salvador and Honduras. On Friday morning, Homeland Security officials said they had reunified all eligible parents with children — but noted many others were not eligible because they have been released from immigration custody, are in their home countries or chose not to be reunited. "The administration will continue to make every effort to reunify eligible adults with their children," a Homeland Security statement said. The federal judge in San Diego who ordered the reunifications must decide how to address the hundreds of still-separated children whose parents have been deported, as well as how much time, if any, reunified parents should be allowed to file asylum claims. Lee Gelemt, an attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union representing separated parents, said Thursday it was unclear how long it might take to find the parents returned to their homelands. "I think it's just going to be really hard detective work and hopefully we're going to find them," he said.

TO THE CITIZENS OF WARREN COUNTY...

It has been an honor to serve and protect since I joined the U.S. Army as a combat engineer at the age of 18. I served 3 years active duty, then served 3 years with the Tennessee National Guard. On April 13, 1978, I was hired by the McMinnville Police Department, where I have worked my way up through the ranks from patrolman, sergeant, investigator to lieutenant, since 1988. I have worked hands on with local, state and Federal officials to keep law and order in our community. I have worked and solved cases from petty theft to homicide all over Warren County, as far away as Houma, LA and Conneaut, OH and many places in between.

There have been many changes in law enforcement over the years and different types of criminal activity, although some methods never change. My promise to all of the citizens of Warren County is to protect you to the best of my ability and continue to make Warren County a safe place to live and raise your family. I understand that being sheriff consists of administrative duties, but I will also be a hands on sheriff, working with the public and staff.

I AM HUMBLY ASKING FOR YOUR VOTE AND SUPPORT.

Respectfully,
JOHN T. MORGAN
