

WCHS volleyball

The Lady Pioneers finished with Hailey Wood setting Wanamaker for a kill.

By the third set, Warren County had adjusted to the Cannon County attack and cruised to victory.

"We have to learn to adjust to the teams we're playing and let other teams make mistakes," said Rogers. "When we keep the ball in play, teams will start to wear down and get sporadic. That turns into points for us."

Wanamaker and Reno tied for the team lead with four aces apiece, while Beth Vaughn led the team with six kills. Wanamaker and Jennings finished with four kills each.

Wood was tops on the team with 12 aces, while Reno and fellow freshman Sadie Simmons finished with five and three digs, respectively.

Warren County faced a big test Tuesday night with perennial district powerhouse Cookeville visiting Charlie Dalton Gym. The results were unavailable at press time.

Check Friday's paper for more information.

After losing the majority of last year's Central Tennessee Conference winning roster, most felt the WCMS volleyball team would take a step back.

Nobody bothered telling the rest of the returning Lady Pioneers.

Warren County has started the season on fire, picking up its latest win Monday at home against Shelbyville Harris. The Lady Pioneers won 25-22 and 25-11, making quick work of their CTC rivals.

"This team has shown the ability to really cover the court well," said coach Kelly Clayborne, who guided last year's team to the title. "They're really working to improve and they seem to get better each time we get on the court."

"Against Shelbyville, we started out a little slow. We had a little more fire in the second game. Our serving was on target and we defended the net well."

Warren County had already dispatched Tullahoma in Franklin South last week on the road, but Monday was the first chance to impress the home crowd.

Brianna Winkler did the heavy lifting in the first game. Winkler showed her precision from the service line, surgically picking apart the Shelbyville defense.

When Winkler wasn't finding open room for aces, the offense funneled the ball to Mia Hobbs. Hobbs finished the first game with three kills, and she was only getting started.

Hobbs owned the net in the second game, blocking Harris attacks and punctuating Lady Pioneer points with big slams. Hobbs finished the second game with seven kills, helping Warren County win with ease.

Jessie Young also played a big part in the second game, getting hot behind the line with seven aces.

Warren County put its winning streak on the line Tuesday with an away match in Coffee County. The results were unavailable at press time.

The Lady Pioneers return to action Thursday at home against White County. Action is set to start at 5 p.m.
