

Eight days remain to land spot on ballot

BY JAMES CLARK

Like a basket of endless fries, this election season just keeps coming.

Voters will have one more chance to go to the polls in 2018 as city, state and federal elections are on the ballot in November.

Residents in McMinnville and Morrison looking to run for office have just over one week to get on the ballot. The qualifying deadline is next Thursday, Aug. 16, for seats in those cities.

In McMinnville, there's sure to be excitement with Mayor Jimmy Haley getting elected to serve as County Executive last week. However, city officials have given no indication they will take action to get that race on the ballot to let voters decide their next mayor.

Three McMinnville aldermen seats currently held by Everett Brock, Steve Harvey and Ryle Chastain will be up for grabs Nov. 6. All three have already qualified.

Former city administrator David Rutherford has also qualified, along with former county commissioner David Rhea.

Three others have picked up qualifying papers, but not returned them. They are Allen Hitchcock, David Hill and Jeff McKinnon.

There will be a local mayor elected in 2018, but it will be in Morrison. Current Mayor Sue Anderson, fresh off an election to School Board last week, will be trying for her second victory in three months when she seeks re-election.

Anderson has already picked up and returned her qualifying papers for mayor. Travis Battles is her only potential opposition thus far. He has picked up papers but not returned them.

There are two Morrison alderman seats available for full, four-year terms. Thus far, Joe H. Hefner Jr. is the only person to pick up papers and return them. That means there's only one candidate for two seats.

There is also a vacant two-year term for Morrison alderman on the ballot. Four people have picked up papers for that seat – Lajuana Baker, Travis Battles, Roger D. Smith and Sue Jones. Smith and Jones have qualified.

In addition to city races, voters will be electing a new governor in November as Bill Lee faces Karl Dean. There will be a new U.S. senator too as Phil Bredesen faces Marsha Blackburn, among other races.

Smokin' in McMinnville returning this weekend

BY LISA HOBBS

(McMinnville, Tennessee)

McMinnville's air will soon be filled with the smell of competition as Smokin' in McMinnville kicks off this Friday, Aug. 10 and continues through Saturday.

Professional teams will be rolling in this week. This Kansas City Barbeque Society-sanctioned event has attracted 28 teams. The grill-off begins Friday.

For local backyard grilling connoisseurs, the Backyard Division has attracted five teams. Setup starts Friday at 7:30 a.m. It is also sanctioned by KCBS. New this year is the Youth Grillin' in McMinnville. Youth chefs ages 12-18 will face off Friday at 6 p.m. There will be two rounds of cooking. The competition has 11 entries.

The Best of the Butts for Charity will be held Saturday. Five teams are vying for cash prizes that go toward their selected charity.

Judges Choice: first place $500, second place $300, third place $150, fourth place $100, and fifth thru 10th place $25.

• People's Choice: first place $200
• Best Charity Display Table: $100

Each team will be given up to five Boston Butts to cook for the competition. Judging for People's Choice will be by tickets. Patrons will place the ticket they received at the entrance in the container of their favorite team. Charge is $8 per person. Serving begins at 11 a.m.

For more information, call 473-1212 or visit the city's website, www.mcminnvilletn.com.
