

A Tabulated List of Grace

A couple who resorted to do-it-yourself marriage counseling resolved to list each others' faults and then read them aloud. The wife gave her list and he read: You snore; you eat in bed; the list continued. When the husband gave her his list, she smiled. He'd written his grievances, but next to each he'd written- I forgive this. The result was a tabulated list of grace. Imagine you are before the judgment seat of Christ. The book is opened and the reading begins--each sin, each deceit, and each occasion of greed. But as soon as the infraction is read, grace is proclaimed. Jesus says, I forgive this. Registered forgiveness! No humiliation! No shame! Because in heaven you will be in your sinless state--happy to let God do in heaven what he did on earth. He will be honored in your weakness!

State departments pushes PROM safety for students

The Mississippi Highway Safety Patrol and the Mississippi Department of Rehabilitation Services have partnered for a prom season safety initiative entitled "PROM - Please Return on Monday in the same condition you left."

This campaign urges prom-bound students to make good choices such as buckling up, no texting and driving, and no drinking and driving.

"While Prom Night is one of the most significant nights for a high school student, it is significant for the parents as well," said Colonel Chris Gillard, Director of the Mississippi Highway Patrol.

"The parents stay up all night after the photos, after their child leaves, to see that they return home in the same condition he or she left. Our goal is to help ensure that the child makes it back to the parent."

This campaign is the first partnership with the Mississippi Department of Rehabilitation Services (MDRS), and the first to be conducted for prom season in MHP history.

"We wanted to join with MHP to show teens the full circle of consequences of choices to text and drive, drink and drive and of not wearing a seatbelt because automobile accidents are a leading cause of traumatic brain injuries and spinal cord injuries—and because many of our clients are living with disabilities caused by such accidents," said Chris Howard, Executive Director for the Mississippi Department of Rehabilitation Services.

"It is an honor to be partnering with the Department of Rehabilitation Services for something that means so much for these teens and their parents," said Colonel Gillard.

State troopers and representatives from MDRS will be bringing special events to students around the state, to encourage safe habits and educate them on the dire consequences of poor choices made on prom night. Posters featuring the art work of Cartoonist and Radio Host Marshall Ramsey will also be in the schools.

"We want everyone to have fun and enjoy their memorable night, but we do not want those memories to be that of tragedy," @MSHwyPatrol and @MS-DeptoRehab with the hashtags #SafeProm #PleaseReturnOnMonday and #prom2k18.
