will assist public housing agencies" (PHAs), transition through the new Smokefree Public Housing Initiative, funded by the Bristol-Myers Squibb Foundation. The Lung Association will share best practices to implement smokefree housing policies, provide quit-smoking support to residents who are ready to quit and offer information on lung cancer screening to those who might qualify.

"A move to smokefree public housing will protect the health of millions of people from the harmful effects of second-hand smoke," said American Lung Association Health Promotions Manager, Rochelle Culp Thompson. "There is no safe level of exposure to secondhand smoke, and we're proud to assist in the implementation of smoke-free policies and help smokers quit, when they're ready."

Through this new initiative across 10 states including Mississippi, the American Lung Association will provide public housing agencies and other low-income housing providers with technical assistance, expertise, resources and support to implement smokefree housing policies, and will provide residents with referral to proven-effective quit smoking services and information on the availability of lung cancer screening for those who meet the high-risk criteria.

In Mississippi, the American Lung Association in partnership with our tobacco control partners want to provide all the tools necessary to implement protective policies and preventative programs for your residents. We can assist by helping resident understand and adapt to the policy by providing resources, hosting tenant education workshops and training cessation navigators.

On November 30, 2016, HUD announced its final rule that requires all public housing agencies to implement smokefree policies over the following 18 months. The new smokefree rule will protect close to two million residents living in public housing from exposure to secondhand smoke. This population includes many of those most vulnerable to the effects of secondhand smoke, including close to 700,000 children and more than 300,000 adults over the age of 62. The smokefree policies apply to all residential units as well as common areas, and include a 25-foot buffer zone around buildings.

"The reality is that smoke seeps from one unit to another and there is no way to keep it separate, which places the health of everyone living in the building, including children, at risk. The only way to truly protect residents from second-hand smoke is for the entire building to be completely smokefree," Thompson said. "This new project will provide important tools and resources to help public housing agencies implement and enforce smokefree policies in Mississippi."

The U.S. Surgeon General has stated there is no safe level of secondhand smoke exposure. More than 41,000 deaths per year in the United States are caused by exposure to secondhand smoke. Secondhand smoke can cause or worsen a wide range of lung diseases in children and adults including lung cancer, respiratory infections and asthma exacerbations.

Cancer survivors are particularly vulnerable to exposure to secondhand smoke, and among lung cancer patients, exposure leads to higher death rates.
