tive effect on the county’s economic development and nurturing workforce development.
“By partnering with Holmes Community College Workforce Development and Adult Education Departments, we are addressing the needs of our local and regional workforce,” said Hathorn. “The convenience of traveling less than 10 miles to receive skilled training at a very affordable cost is key in a rural community such as ours, not to mention being able to offer a free GED and SMART START program through Holmes Community College Adult Education. The SMART START program will assist each adult learner with properly completing job applications, preparing for job interviews and exiting the program with a current resume’ to use as they begin their new employment search. Together, we are working with local businesses and industries to gain detailed insight on what their needs are and gearing our training programs specifically to them.”
