

Retired MC educators honored

Special to The Clinton Courier

At the recent Mississippi College convocation, to open the institution's 193rd academic year, MC leaders saluted Wanda W. Mosley, Sandra Parks, Don W. Locke and Kenneth Quinn, retired educators. All four Mississippians received the honorary status of professor Emerita/Emeritus for their work on the Clinton campus.

Mosley recently retired as assistant director at the Leland Speed Library along College Street to cap off four decades as a librarian.

Beloved by students for more than three decades, Parks worked as an award-winning accounting professor at the MC School of Business. The Clinton resident often returns to campus to renew old friendships at major events year-round.

tion dean, the university established the doctorate in educational leadership. The MC School of Education is also home to an innovative doctorate in professional counseling as well as a graduate degree in dyslexia therapy. Locke's fifty-plus years in the education arena included serving for a year as president of the nation's largest association of professional counselors. Early in his career, the 1963 MC alumnus gained fame as the Murrah High tennis coach who led his Jackson team to capture the state championship. A Clintonian, Dr. Locke received the prestigious Order of the Golden Arrow Award at MC's Homecoming a few years ago.

A 1957 graduate of Jackson's Murrah High and Mississippi College alumnus, Quinn was recognized in 2006 as the university's Order of the Golden Arrow Award winner. He's known as Dr. Kenneth Quinn after he was presented with an honorary Doctor of Arts degree at Mississippi College.

The Professor Emeritus status goes to retired faculty members making significant contributions to the university through a distinguished record of scholarship, teaching/research or service.

Don Locke was named School of Education Dean Emeritus at MC.

Locke served with distinction as the MC School of Education dean for seventeen years after working at the University of Louisiana at Monroe. "My career focus has been developing educational curricula and programs in the areas of counseling and education."
