Greenfield banners recognize veterans

When city alderman Jan Johnson first conceived of banners to recognize Greenfield veterans, she thought she might get responses from about 20 families. In 2017, its inaugural year, shared news of the plan at the Greenfield City Board meeting and via Facebook. Soon, she had orders for 66 of the colorful flags that include a photo and years of service. This year the Greenfield Advancement Association-coordinated effort reached 88.

All branches of service, male and female, past and current service members are featured on the streets of downtown Greenfield and along Hwy. 45.

Families cover the costs of $150-$200 to produce the banners and purchase the brackets to hang.

Johnson explains that last year the banners were hung by city workers immediately following Fire Prevention Week and removed before Thanksgiving. This year the dates were shifted to early November so that families visiting for the holidays would be able to see the installations during the long weekend. The city will remove the banners after Thanksgiving.

Johnson said no decisions have been made about next year noting that availability of exhibit locations and weather damage are factors to consider. The final decision will occur after an evaluation and be announced in the spring. To learn more, contact Johnson at shajohn@charter.net.
