of the century wasn't much more than a dirt road still traveled by horse and wagon and that is exactly how it's portrayed on the hill. Some of the local businesses on Main Street are The Boutique which sells canned items including jams, jellies, and pickles, as well as souvenirs made by volunteers; the General Store sells clothing items, souvenirs and WMSTR Show Books; and the Ladies Activities Building features ladies making wagon wheel rugs, weaving and looming.

"People seem to really enjoy seeing the old-time things. Older people remember using and doing the things we demonstrate. Some of the younger people are really amazed at the size of the cabin and the fact that eleven people might have lived there.

They are amazed that there isn't much with a tiny kitchen which had really just a stove," Kim Gilbertson commented.

"There is something for everyone at Rollag," Kelsey stated and she wasn't kidding. Kids can either ride on colorful carved horses on the carousel or real ponies; a little miniature train or the giant 353. Throughout the weekend, there is a style show showing off trends from the eighteenth century. There is live music on random porches, around the campfires, at the Gazebo and even a jam session in the Blacksmith Shop and square dancing in the Nelson Building.

There is also a daily parade, not one but two, on Friday and Saturday. The first one rolls through at 10 a.m.
