

Predator Association - Continued...

"It allows us as producers to help with the Youth Fair Association, donate to the Buyers Club, or buy premiums to be able to help the youth in Mills County that way. It allows us to be able to donate to something like the WWII memorial project and being able to give back to the community and other organizations that need financial help because having these predators under control allows us to be profitable in our line of work as farmers and ranchers." If the predator population were to ever get out of control, the economy suffers.

"We have two trappers in this county," Sutherland said. "If we were to lose one, the one remaining would be overwhelmed to the point where he could not be effective. We have to keep that balance between predators and feral hogs. If we let that get out of control, there will be people that won't be able to raise sheep and goats and people that will have trouble farming due to the increase in feral hogs and other predators - that takes tax dollars and money out of our local economy. Eventually, we would be one of those one buck counties that have very low deer population and they do not have that big increase of money coming into the county which is what we have every year due to deer season and wildlife recreation."

Mildred Peters, owner of the Service Feed Mill in Priddy and member since the association was founded, is a prime example of someone who has benefited from the association. "It's helped me by catching coyotes and putting out snares and traps to catch them so I don't have 13 of my lambs dead," Peters said. "I'm able to pay into the association donate feed and through the Service Feed Mill in Priddy to be sold so that they can get more money together to pay our two trappers. I don't know how we could ever do without them."

Mills County is not just known for prime hunting and livestock land, but also for the friendly inhabitants and supportive community.

"We have such a great and supportive community," Sutherland said. "It's amazing how they come together and work hard to get a job done and help preserve our way of life and our heritage here in Mills County."

As the weather cools and hunting season begins, remember the Predator Association and the way they contribute to make hunting season enjoyable and plentiful.
