

VSU offers middle school students opportunity to build robots and apps June 10-14

Valdosta State University's Department of Computer Science and STEAM Center for Applied Creativity and Innovation will host the annual Computing Adventures at VSU summer camp for rising sixth through eighth graders June 10-14.

Participants will be able to build Lego robots and program them to disable a trap, navigate a maze, play piano, dance, and more.

They will also create their very own Android apps. No prior programming experience is necessary to attend the camp.

"Computing knowledge is an essential skill now," said Dr. Krishnendu Roy, head of the Department of Computer Science and associate professor of computer science. "Students will use computing in some way during their high school and college career and beyond. Our camp enables students to explore computing and critical thinking in a fun and engaging environment, and we hope that through this camp they will get interested in computing as a field and hopefully think of pursuing it as a future career."

The fee to attend Computing Adventures at VSU is $225. Need-based scholarships and sibling discounts are available.

The deadline to apply is Friday, May 24. Space is limited. Visit <http://cs-camp.valdosta.edu> for the application form and instructions.

The camp will take place at the STEAM Center from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. each day, and lunch and snacks will be provided.

The STEAM Center for Applied Creativity and Innovation at VSU utilizes creative methods to educate South Georgia in the areas of Science, Technology, Engineering, Arts, and Mathematics. Its programs and resources are available to learners of all ages in order to achieve its mission of creating a collaborative community that cultivates increased STEAM literacy for all.

Making Space for God in Your Life

"But seek first his kingdom and his righteousness, and all these things will be given to you as well."
—Matthew 6:33 NIV

If we want to have a closer relationship with God—and we should want this above all else—it is important to create the time and space necessary to do so. In much the same way that a new exercise or study regimen will probably require a change in our schedule, if we want to be a more spiritual person, we must carve out the time and space necessary for it. In our busy lives this usually entails finding time (and space) at the beginning or end of our day, since the middle of our day is usually filled up with work or school or taking care of family. God won't force his way into our lives. If we want more of God in our lives, we should create the time and space for that to happen. There is a good reason why most monks start their days early—it's the only time that they aren't likely to be interrupted by life's other necessities. It is also important that the space where you pray or meditate be conducive to it. A quiet comfortable corner of a room is all that is necessary. Find some quiet time and space at the start or end of each day to make room for God in your life. — Christopher Simon
