

The GCHS Marching Pride Band would not be complete without its Color Guard and the Sassy Cats Dance Team.

and off the field. With twirling flags and jumping dancers, the drums and sliding trombones, the band moves in sync to the beat of the music.

Band parents, color guard parents and dance parents encourage their kids to do their best. These parents often listen to the same songs over and over while their child practices. Some parents listen to the same wrong notes or the beating of rhythms on counters, shoes, the dashboard or anything that can make the sound of a drum. When the band takes the field for the halftime show and their parents see what they have been working so hard to learn, it's worth all the squeaking, tapping and jumping.

The stadium wouldn't sound the same without the band. Most people in the stands tap their feet to the sound of the cadence as the students march into the stands. Everyone takes off their hats and stands as the band plays the national anthem, and cheerleaders dance to fight song and other music. The music brings people together and the Marching Pride helps bring a fun vibe to the games and adds a soundtrack to the season.
