

Championing OKC's creative renaissance

19th annual deadCenter Film Festival slated for June 6-9

By Ryan Horton

As Oklahoma's largest film festival, deadCenter is a great place to see exciting new short films, insightful documentaries, hilarious comedies, scary monster movies and the best independent films from around the world.

Each year, deadCenter brings the best and brightest filmmakers from around the world to mingle with the filmmakers and film fans that call Oklahoma home.

This year's film festival is set for June 6-9.

An estimated 33,000 people were in attendance for last year's deadCenter Film Festival, hosted in downtown Oklahoma City.

Over the last two decades, deadCenter Film Festival has become a cornerstone in Oklahoma City's creative renaissance.

Organizers expect the annual event to continue its expansion to a larger audience and credit the growth to a surge in popularity for Oklahoma-made films, the addition of a new techCenter conference within the festival, and several key Oklahoma-made films.

"We get over 30,000 people at our festival so we do a lot of free things including outdoor showings that are a huge hit," said deadCenter executive director Lance McDaniel at the 2018 festival.

Over 400 volunteers are also needed to put on the growing event each June.

Prosperous panels

The Oklahoma Film + Music Office Panel Series has become a huge success for those interested in a deeper look at the film industry.

Last year's panels drew over 125 people to each of the seven presentations focused on working in the film industry.

"We're getting 125 people in the main room and about 100 in the overflow room for our panels," said McDaniel.

Seminars include discussions about lights, camera, sound, makeup, wardrobe, art, casting, acting, producing, directing, short films, documentaries, producing films in Oklahoma and also provide valuable networking opportunities.

"ACM@UCO is an awesome partner for deadCenter," said Tava Sofsky, Director of the Oklahoma Film + Music Office. "We've seen the demand and now have the panel room, and overflow room and a networking room down the hall."
