Confessing Our Sins

"If you forgive anyone's sins, their sins are forgiven; if you do not forgive them, they are not forgiven."
—John 20:23 NIV

We live in paradoxical times. While many share the most intimate details of their life on social media for all the world to see, the practice of confession as a spiritual discipline has fallen by the wayside. In surveys of practicing Catholics, three-quarters of them "report that they never participate in the sacrament of Reconciliation or that they do so less than once a year." (Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate) Among mainstream Protestant denominations, confession as a ritual is practiced only in the Lutheran church, and one wonders how often Christians of any sect adhere to the Biblical injunction to "confess your sins to each other and pray for each other so that you may be healed." (James 5:16 NIV) Whether as a society we are more or less confessional than in times past is certainly debatable. Reconciliation tribunals, psychotherapy, and encounter groups are arguably all modern versions of confession. The flip side of confession is the Biblical injunction to tell others when they have sinned: "If your brother or sister sins, go and point out their fault, just between the two of you." (Matthew 18:15 NIV) While it is easy to notice and point to the faults of others, we often chafe at the slightest perceived criticism, and instead of thanking the person for helping us to be a better person, we reject their critique. A periodic examination of one's conscience and a willingness to confess one's sins is healthy for the soul. Therefore, confess your sins and pray that you will be forgiven. — Christopher Simon
