

Tucker's book on Amazon

Local writer Lanny Tucker's chronicle of Kentucky's 16th county, "History of Green County, Kentucky," is now available on Amazon in both paperback and kindle.

The book may be purchased locally at the Glover's Station Antique Mall on the Greensburg square, or by contacting Tucker on social media. It will also be available at a book signing in the Green County Public Library Saturday, May 4 from 9 a.m. to 12 p.m.

Tucker has previously written two books pertaining to Green County history, "History Among Us" in 2007 and "Osceola" in 2011. The second edition of his historical horror novel, "Harp's Head," was recently released and is also available on Amazon, or by contacting him. The first edition may be purchased at Longhunter's Coffee & Tea Company in Greensburg.

Nonprofit Sales Tax Exemption became effective March 26

Governor Bevin's March 26th signing of HB 354 resolved questions and confusion about the application of sales tax to nonprofit sales. Due to an emergency clause in this legislation, sales of admissions and tangible property sales at fundraising events by all nonprofit groups and governmental organizations are now exempt from sales tax for transactions on or after March 26, 2019. These nonprofit, governmental, and civic organizations will no longer charge sales tax on these types of transactions as specified in Sections 28-29 of HB 354. All of these non-profit organizations should discontinue charging sales tax to their customers and benefactors immediately. The new exemption does not apply to sales by retail businesses such as bookstores and thrift stores owned or operated by nonprofit or governmental groups. The Department of Revenue is available to provide additional guidance as needed and will soon be posting updated information on its website at www.revenue.ky.gov and at www.taxanswers.ky.gov. Submit specific questions by email to dorsalesusetaxanswers@ky.gov or call 502-564-5170.

Guthrie's introduces health care policy at summit in DC

Congressman Brett Guthrie (KY-02), top Republican on the House Energy and Commerce Committee's Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee and senior member of the committee's Health Subcommittee, outlined his health care policy agenda for the 116th Congress at a policy summit last week. Guthrie and Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee Chair Rep. Diana DeGette (D-CO) announced at the summit that the Energy and Commerce Oversight and Investigations subcommittee is launching a bipartisan investigation on the rising costs of insulin. Guthrie noted that while some innovative new drugs have high costs because of research and development investments, medicines like insulin that have existed for years should not face the same problem. "Insulin is a very important drug, and while it has changed some, there hasn't been a dramatic breakthrough over the last hundred years," said Guthrie. "Unlike innovative new drugs, insulin isn't a big blockbuster drug on the marketplace, but the list price continues to increase for most insulins on the market. I'm glad that we can really dig down into insulin and see what's happening there and then maybe extrapolate that information throughout the entire pharmaceutical industry. It's the perfect drug for us to look into drug pricing because so many people are affected by diabetes and so many people have to have insulin. It's not an option for them and we have to figure out why costs are rising." The first hearing on the rising costs of insulin will take place on Tuesday, April 2, at 10:30 a.m. ET. Guthrie hopes to continue the bipartisan work he and DeGette have done already at the Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee.
