

Newspaper is more than something to read

BY CLEVIS JEFFRIES

Every week, after the arrival of the Greensburg Record-Herald to his home on Mell Ridge, Glen Posey is visited by his daughter, Angie.

Her intent is to catch her dad up on the latest news by reading to him.

Angie Posey Scott has been reading to her dad since she was a young girl.

It all came about because of his desire to be informed of what was happening locally in the news.

“I like having Way Back When read to me,” Posey said, “That is my favorite section, because it brings back a lot of memories.”

“My daughter helps me with words in order to understand the information given in an article or section.”

Posey said he also enjoys cutting out parts of the paper that interests him.

Scott mentioned that because of her dad’s limited educational opportunities, she assists him in his reading by clarifying information found in the newspaper.

“My dad and I often engage in a conversation about what is going on in our community,” Scott said. “The local paper is my dad’s main source of information for news.”

Scott said the weekly newspaper brings much more to her than just stories to read and photos to look at.

“It is an opportunity for me to spend time with my dad and gives me a chance to catch up on the news also.”

Her dad also agrees that time with his daughter is well spent.
