

Ballpark days...

It's spring... which means everything is in full swing in good old Greensburg. People are out and about til dark and it's finally warm (Monday doesn't count!).

For the next few months, you can find me and my clan at the ballpark.

Cayden plays 8U baseball. Adam coaches his team and also coaches a travel team. Conleigh starts tee ball this year.

Thankfully, and also unfortunately, both my kiddos will play on Monday and Thursday nights. On those nights I will be donning my baseball t-shirt (Yes, I'm that mom) and wearing running shoes, so I can zip back and forth and hopefully not miss anything exciting.

Literally... we will be all over the place. We have 5 p.m. games, 5:30, 7, etc. and double headers make it even more fun [chaotic]!

Boys 8U is a blast. You've got the young ones that just moved up, and the ones in their last year and really know their stuff. They learn SO much in that league. From the first game to the last game-- it's a HUGE improvement and a pretty cool transformation. There is nothing more exciting than watching my boy play. Cayden loves baseball. We are down there 5 days a week practicing. The kid plays with his whole heart and he is SO close to a homerun.

My current fear? What if I miss that homerun because I'm watching my daughter do ballet on second base or pick a dandelion in the outfield?

Yet - I don't want to miss that tiny pink bat swing one time either. And that adorable pink glove on her tiny little hand? It's the sweetest. Don't let all the pink fool you.

She can hit the ball and she knows how to play.

Last weekend we were out on the field practicing. She and Cayden were taking turns hitting/running. She hit the ball (with no tee), and ran to first base. Quizzing her, I said, "Conleigh, where do you run when Cayden hits the ball?"

Hands on her hips... "To second base. Then to third. Then home. I KNOW what to do!"

Got it. She is her brother's biggest fan, so I guess she's paid more attention than I thought.

Just when I think she's toughening up and going to be the rough and tumble girl I always thought I'd end up with... nope. She needs to wash her hands immediately after batting, cause Heaven forbid there's dirt on them.

It's fun. It's busy. And you know what? I wouldn't trade the busy afternoons and long nights at the ballpark for anything in the world.
