

Heading to the beach. See ya'll later!

By the time you read this, I'll be soaking up some sun on the beach in Florida with my family, and I CANNOT WAIT.

I will go ahead and apologize for the early deadline we had Friday, for this week's paper. We started advertising it a few weeks ago, so hope you caught it.

This paper was finished (today) Friday at noon and I will plop the homecoming photo on the front and ship it to the printer first thing Saturday morning before we head out.

My phone and laptop will be near, just in case anything life-shattering happens in our sleepy little town, Heaven forbid. And if that happens, I'll figure out a way to get that done.

I plan to do NOTHING all week long.

I am packing three books and I hope to read them all while watching my beach-loving kiddos frolic on the beach and by the pool.

And there is NOTHING more beautiful than the beach sunset.

I fully intend to relax.

I don't plan to write any stories or check any emails.

I won't be painting anything, hanging anything or unpacking boxes.

I won't be taking my red ink pen and proofing.

I won't need a hammer, tape measure or the drill.

I won't be working out or going to the gym. (At least that's my plan. Guess that will depend on how much I eat!)

And-- I've even shipped my husband off on a fishing trip with some friends one of the days. Can someone say, "NAPTITUDE!"

We absolutely love the beach.

We have a few friends that are staying in the same condominium, and Cayden and Conleigh are super excited. The only thing better than the beach, is the beach with best friends.

We get up every morning, pack a small cooler, head to the beach, and relax. After lunch, we usually head to the pool for a few hours. Then it's showers and dinner. Our children love to try to catch fish, look for shells and build castles.

And at this point, the break is much needed.

It has been a whirlwind of a year, between here at the office, to remodeling a house and moving.

Tonight, I have to unpack boxes, to find our stuff, to pack our suitcase.

Or, my friend Andy Olson had a fantastic idea, I could just pack moving boxes and take off!

Fun times.

We will be back to normal here at the Record-Herald by Monday with the regular deadline at 2 p.m. CT.

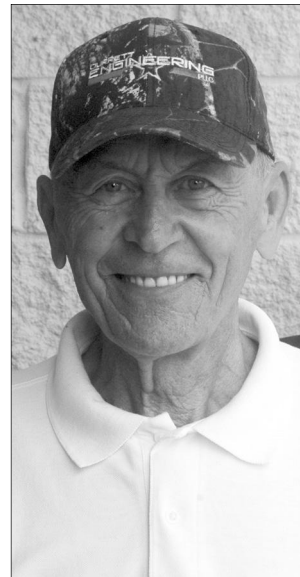

In the meantime, check out Summersville Days Oct. 11-12 since I'll miss it, and have a great fall break!

Beach or not, find some time to relax and make memories. My kids will never remember the late nights I work, but they'll remember the late night ice cream runs I'm fully intending on having in Florida.

Letter to the Editor

New to town

To the Editor:

Our original retirement plan did not include a move to Green County, but we located a home here that was the answer to our needs.

Moving to Greensburg on Cow Days 2019 was not necessarily the best plan either, and fortunately the two moving vans did not have to join the parade route.

Everyone we have met in Greensburg has been welcoming and the move here has been a blessing. We have met many other couples who chose Green County as their retirement place

Not growing up in the county and not having grandchildren in the school and athletic programs, how does one meet new people in town?

Sincerely,
Diana Parker
