

Begley Scholars Bardin and Matney visit New Orleans

Green County natives Zylar Bardin and Austin Matney from Greensburg, traveled to New Orleans in September as Begley Scholars at Lindsey Wilson College.

The annual excursion is an enrichment and learning opportunity for recipients of the exclusive Begley Scholarship, the highest scholarship honor at Lindsey Wilson.

Bardin and Matney accompanied LWC President William T. Luckey Jr., and first lady Elise Luckey. They experienced many of the popular attractions of the Big Easy including: Oak Alley Plantation, Preservation Hall, Café Du Monde, Emeril's, Commander's Palace, Arnaud's, the French Quarter, New Orleans School of Cooking, the WWII Museum and Honey Island Swamp Tours.

"This trip was one of the best experiences that I've gotten to participate in and I'd like to thank Dr. Bill and Elise Luckey, Amy Thompson Wells and anyone else who had a hand in coordinating it," Zylar Bardin said.

"I am humbled to have been selected as a Begley Scholar, giving me the opportunity to make new friendships and go on once in a lifetime trips while getting my college education. I can not wait to see what doors this scholarship will open for me in the future."

The current class of Begley Scholars consists of 21 Lindsey Wilson students. The academic scholarship includes full-tuition, fees, room and board and features all-expense paid trips to one of Ernest Hemingway's "Great American Cities" -- New Orleans, Chicago, San Francisco and New York.

Matney, the son of Kerry and Jeanie Matney, is a senior at LWC and was selected as a Begley Scholar in 2016.

Bardin, the son of Karla Deaton, is a freshman at LWC and was selected as a Begley Scholar in 2019.

Zylar Bardin and Austin Matney experienced many of popular attractions in New Orleans on a recent trip including the New Orleans School of Cooking.

Report: Lexington Legends among minor league teams facing extinction

LEXINGTON HERALD-LEADER

Lexington's minor league baseball team is facing extinction, according to a report by The New York Times this past weekend.

The Legends, who have called Lexington home since 2001, are one of 42 minor league baseball teams that could lose their major league affiliations under a plan proposed by Major League Baseball, the report said.

The Class A Legends, who are coming off back-to-back South Atlantic League championships and are viewed as one of minor league baseball's success stories, are affiliated with the Kansas City Royals.

Losing its MLB parent club would force the Legends and other teams on the list to attempt to make their way as independents or fold altogether, the report said. Two other South Atlantic League teams, the Hagerstown Suns and the West Virginia Power, were also on the list reported by the Times.

The proposal, which would reportedly take effect after the 2020 season unless changes can be negotiated, is intended to increase efficiencies and improve conditions for players at the minor league levels, The New York Times reported.

"I didn't have any inkling, let alone any reason, to think we'd be in this position," Legends President Andy Shea told the Times.

Bill Madden of the New York Daily News wrote that "the repercussions from this contraction plan are going to be enormous.

Not just for the minor league communities, most of which are the grass roots of baseball, but for MLB itself which, conceivably will be hit with an avalanche of lawsuits from communities that have built new ballparks on taxpayers' money, all of which would figure to threaten their long-cherished anti-trust exemption."

Bill Baer of NBC Sports reported that MLB's proposal is short-sighted.

"They'll get their P.R. win by increasing pay for minor leaguers while drastically reducing its minor league workforce. They may even save money overall. But the ripple effect of slashing 42 minor league teams across the country will stunt the sport's growth in the long-term. And that's bad for everyone."

Three tie in contest

Robert Loy, Brad Shuffett and Grady Shuffett tied for the prizes in the last football contest. All missed only one game. Robert Loy wins with his tie-breaker guess, of UK winning by 18 over Vanderbilt.

UK won by 24. He wins two Green River Live tickets to the Heart of Kentucky Band, a buffet from Creekside Restaurant, a Phillips Lane gift certificate and a dinner from Lee's Famous Recipe.
