benefit farmers.

tee, but they failed.

the current one.

in," Newsom said.

Newsom remains an advocate of the pumps, saying agriculture is the region's only industry. He said he doesn't want to drain wetlands, just control high-water crests like have a flood level we can live

"We're just wanting to

But the water isn't done

yet. Forecasters had predicted a brief but sharp drop in the Mississippi River later this month, which could have allowed the floodgate to reopen. That relief now appears unlikely, which could mean weeks more of the long, slow

The U.S. Army Corps of

Engineers announced Monday it was releasing enough water into nearby Eagle Lake to raise already swollen levels by 4 feet (1.2 meters), aiming to prevent a flood-control structure from being undermined. The Mississippi

Agency delivered 10,000

sandbags Monday to Sharkey County officials, and heavy rain is possible later

Lance Lowrey, who lives near the Sellars, told Newsom on Monday that he's ready to evacuate with his daughter and two grandchildren. Water is beginning to submerge part of the state highway leading to Lowrey's home. That dwelling remains dry for now, but he relies on his truck to make it down his

"I ain't got no boat," Low-

Standing in a cold, driving rain outside his front door,

Lowrey said things are get-

"It keeps raining," he said.

flooded driveway.

rey said.

ting worse.

Management

siege.

Emergency

this week.

MARCH 2019

In Mississippi backwater, flood rises after weeks of waiting

Associated Press

For decades, Peggy Sellars and her husband George have warily watched periodic floodwaters inundate the land around their home in ty Supervisor Bill Newsom the Mississippi Delta, but the said residents began noticdwelling always remained ing the water rising out of dry — until this year.

waiting, rising water finally got their house on Monday.

moved out of their residence pleted. The water's steady, east of Rolling Fork, cor- inch-by-inch rise is cutting rectly concluding the worst off highways and isolating flooding since 1973 would communities. overtop a small levee around house.

"I'm devastated," she said. "The water is in my house."

victims of an unusual flood moved out across Sharkey structures.

Weeks of rainfall have fed occupants. high waters in the Mississippi River, which is lined with blow will fall on farmers. a levee that keeps those wa- By the time things dry out, ters contained. Meanwhile, it will be too late to plant the Yazoo Backwater Levee corn. It may still be posalso protects thousands of sible to plant cotton, but square miles from inundation farmers might be limited to that could back up the Yazoo a late planting of soybeans. River north of Vicksburg.

the Mississippi has also sent son, said they'll probably water rising between the limp by with the assistance backwater levee and the even of crop insurance payouts taller levee along the Missis- linked to their inability to sippi.

When water is low, the Big Sunflower River, the Little down," Dornbusch said. Sunflower River, Deer Creek Mississippi is high, the gate is closed to protect against even worse flooding and water backs up across the flat land of the Mississippi Delta. And every time it rains

This year, the Steele Bayou floodgate has been closed since Feb. 15. Sharkey Counthe wooded swamps about After weeks of fearful 10 days later. Now, engineers say the region is on track for the worst flood since 1973, Two weeks ago, they had before the levee was com-

Without the backwater letheir neighborhood. They re- vee, the flood would actuturned twice a day to check ally be worse. But it's bad things, worried about po- enough. Peter Nimrod, chief tential looters and the wa- engineer of the Mississippi tery peril to their uninsured Levee Board, says the flood will cover at least 500,000 Finally, a Monday after- acres (200,000 hectares), noon boat ride showed the swamping fields 60 miles fate Peggy Sellars had feared. (100 kilometers) or more to the north.

In the sparsely populated The Sellars and the farmers area, most homes remain who plant crops in the nearby dry for now. Newsom esti-Delta flatland are the latest mates about 50 families have that involves flood-control County. A Red Cross shelter in nearby Mayersville has no

But the big economic Albert Dornbusch, who But the rain that swelled farms 5,000 acres with his plant, but he's not sure.

"Tell me when it goes

When the backwater leand Steele Bayou exit the vee was built, the plan was closed-in region through a to pair it with giant pumps floodgate along Steele Bay- that would suck water out of ou, eventually reaching the the area, pushing it over the Mississippi. But when the levee into a flooded Mississippi. But environmentalists fought the pumps for decades, saying they would dry out and destroy wetlands dotting the region. They also argued the pumps, estimated to cost $220 million, were too expensive and would mainly "It's going to get deeper."

Backflow waters flood Mississippi 16 near Rolling Fork, Miss., Monday, March 11, 2019. This week the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), the Mississippi Emergency Management Agency (MEMA), along with select local emergency management offices will be conducting joint damage assessments in response to the severe (AP Photo/Rogelio V. Solis) storms and flooding are impacting the state.

In this Monday, March 11, 2019 photo, Peggy and her husband George Sellars sit by the "lake" that was the driveway to their home, along Mississippi 16, east of Rolling Fork, Miss. The couple said the backwater flooding is the worse they have encountered and correctly concluded that water would overtop the retention levee that protected their house and three others. This week the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), the Mississippi Emergency Management Agency (MEMA), along with select local emergency management offices will be conducting joint damage assessments in response to the severe storms and flooding are impacting the state.

(AP Photo/Rogelio V. Solis)

As backflow waters flood home property and farm land along Mississippi 16 near Rolling Fork, Miss., some residents have taken to using small boats to reach their homes, Monday, March 11, 2019. This week the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), the Mississippi Emergency Management Agency (MEMA), along with select local emergency management offices will be conducting joint damage assessments in

Lorene McCoy Ben Courts March 9

Jenny Clare Christopher Garrett Holland May 25

Péoples Drug Store

Court Square 834-2721 Lexington

AG launches "Students Against Violence" app

Hood launched an app Monday for students struggling with depression, bullying, drug use, and other problems common among teens. The "Students Against Violence" app is a place where students who are struggling with thoughts of suicide or are in a home where there is domestic violence can turn to local and national resources to help them through such situations. The app includes categories for depression/anxiety, self-harm, sui-

Attorney General Jim cide prevention, youth drug abuse, bullying, school violence, teen dating violence, domestic violence, underage drinking, and electronic cigarettes.

The app, which is available for free download on iPhone and Android phones, breaks out the situations listed above into separate sections, describes what a person may feel, think, or experience during that scenario, explains warning signs to identify in yourself or others, and lists resources for more response to the severe storms and flooding are impacting the state.

(AP Photo/Rogelio V. Solis)

help, such as the Mississippi Department of Education's "Connections" Hotline for school violence reporting or the Mississippi Department of Mental Health's Helpline. The phones numbers are directly linked so the user can call from within the app. "This information isn't new, we're just presenting it in a new way to students who do everything from the palm of their hand," General Hood said. "I encourage teachers, school counselors, coaches, and anyone else who works with teenagers to encourage ers." agencies and partners such risk youth.

them to download this app. as the Department of Mental It could be the thing that Health, Mississippi Departprevents them from causing ment of Education, Missisharm to themselves or oth- sippi chapter of the National Alliance on Mental Illness, "I am proud that General and The Partnership for a Hood and Mississippi are the Healthy Mississippi. The first in the nation to provide Jason Foundation, Inc. is a this valuable resource, not group dedicated to the preonly for Mississippi's youth vention of the silent epidembut for those who work with ic of youth suicide through youth," said Jason Founda- educational and awareness tion President Clark Flatt. programs that equip young This project is a collabora- people, educators, youth tion between General Hood workers, and parents with and the Jason Foundation, the tools and resources to with input from several state help identify and assist at-