he did not pose a threat. "A correctional officer who unjustifiably assaults an inmate in his custody betrays the trust placed in those who hold positions of power and authority," said Assistant Attorney General Eric Dreiband of the Civil Rights Division. "The Justice Department is committed to protecting the constitutional rights of every person and will continue to vigorously prosecute these violations."

"Our agents and prosecutors should be commended for investigating and bringing these corrupt officials to justice," said U.S. Attorney D. Michael Hurst Jr. for the Southern District of Mississippi. "Those who abuse their power will not escape the long arm of the law. Our office will continue to fight for and protect the civil rights of everyone."

"Officers within our corrections facilities are critical to public safety and are sworn to uphold the safety of the inmates under their control," said Special Agent in Charge Michelle A.
