Brian Schlueter Retires From Otter Tail County

Brian Schlueter, Otter Tail County's Sheriff for 23 years will retire in January. Schlueter devoted his life to public service with forty-four years in law enforcement. In all his years of law enforcement he maintained a deep sense of compassion. Schlueter's aim, 'Protecting a Great County' is proudly displayed on patrol vehicles. Schlueter grew up in Fergus Falls and left to pursue his interest in law enforcement at Michigan State where he earned a bachelor's degree in criminal justice. He served in a variety of cities and circumstances from a busy community in Washington to rural Otter Tail County. He said he has worked with the finest people here and will miss working beside them.

Sheriff Brian Schlueter will retire in January after serving Otter Tail County for 23 years.

Tail County he has transformed the Sheriff's Office. He established state of the art law enforcement training, equipment and facilities and as a result the Otter Tail County Sheriff's Office is well respected throughout Minnesota and the country.

He oversaw the design and construction of the Sheriff's Operations Center in Ottertail, he implemented equipment upgrades and invested in high quality training for his staff. The centrally located Operations Center houses the Patrol Division and their equipment and well as Water Patrol and the Investigation Division. The facility also serves as a training center and in the event of an emergency can operate as an Emergency Operation Center for the region. Under Schlueter's leadership, the dispatch center's equipment has been upgraded using cutting edge technology to better serve the people of Otter Tail County.

"Otter Tail County Sheriff's Office hires good people and provides some of the best training for its staff of any county in Minnesota," remarked Schlueter.

One might imagine that a long career in law enforcement would take its toll on a positive attitude but not for Schlueter. The challenges of law enforcement have reinforced Schlueter's belief in the importance 'having a heart for people.' Through his career he has seen the changes in society and the impact of social breakdowns. Increased addiction to methamphetamines and heroine and the increasing numbers of cybercrimes have impacted how law enforcement carry out their work. Finding care for those with mental health problems has now become an increasing need within the Sheriff's Office.

"You never know what difference you will make," he said, "I like to see people make it." Barry Fitzgibbons was elected as the new sheriff and will begin his service on January 7, 2019.

Communities Share Money Provided For Mental Health

The Minnesota Department of Human Services has awarded 57 mental health providers a total of $33 million - $11 million per year for three years - to bring mental health services to over half of Minnesota schools.

Minnesota's School-Linked Mental Health program is a critical piece of the state's mental health services for children. Programs help identify mental health needs early, make services available to more children in need, and improve outcomes for children and youth with a mental health diagnosis. Services include assessment, treatment and care coordination, teacher consultation and school-wide trainings. Placing children's mental health services in schools provides an opportunity for mental health promotion, prevention and early identification and intervention in a place that is familiar and comfortable for them and their families.

"School-linked mental health services meet kids where they are at," said Minnesota Department of Human Services Commissioner Emily Piper. "These grants will help us provide needed services to those in need, which is good for parents and kids."

Minnesota Department of Human Services

The School-Linked Mental Health Program began in 2006 and has since expanded to serve schools in 83 of Minnesota's 87 counties. Over the previous five-year grant that ended June 2018, 15,000 students received mental health services from 953 school programs in 287 school districts across the state.

These services help children who have mental illness stay in school and be successful. The program has proven particularly effective in reaching children who have never accessed mental health services, and many children with mental illness are first identified through this program.

"We know that untreated mental health issues make it harder for kids to learn," added Piper. "Children need a good start, and if they get the right help at the right time, they can be successful in school and in life."

A full list of grantees is available on the DHS website, along with more information about the School-Linked Mental Health program.
