In History

January 3, 1777 - During the American Revolution, General George Washington defeated the British at Princeton and drove them back toward New Brunswick. Washington then established winter quarters at Morristown, New Jersey. During the long harsh winter, Washington's army shrank to about a thousand men as enlistments expired and deserters fled.

Ask a Trooper

By Sgt. Neil Dickenson
 Minnesota State Patrol

Question: I have noticed cars that can't be seen in the day when they fail to turn on their lights when it is snowing, raining or foggy. Can you please explain how dangerous it can be and what the law is that covers this?

Answer: During the recent snow event, I noticed some vehicles had no lights on at all during the heavy snowfall and this can create a very dangerous situation, especially when visibility is reduced. Being seen while driving can help reduce your chances of getting into a crash.

Minnesota law says that every vehicle on a roadway shall display lighted headlamps, lighted tail lamps, and illuminating devices from sunset to sunrise. The law also applies when it's raining, snowing, sleeting, or hailing and at any time when visibility is impaired by weather or insufficient light, at a distance of 500 feet ahead.

Basic automatic headlights work through sensors which detect how much light is outside. These sensors are located on the dash of the vehicle. The headlights turn on when the sensors detect a certain level of darkness or the level of ambient light.

The problem is there are limitations to automatic headlights. Sometimes they do not turn on during heavy rain, snow or fog, as the light sensor still detects some light.

Most vehicles retained the conventional headlight switches, which allow drivers to turn lights on or off and bypass the sensors. Many drivers fail to physically turn on their headlights, which will also activate the rear taillights and marker lights. Drivers might assume the sensors will activate all of the vehicle's lights in reduced visibilities, but that is not always the case.

A good rule to follow is if your wipers need to be on, then you should also turn on your headlights, taillights and marker lights. When lights are required, manually turn on your headlights, and you will know for sure that all your lights will be on when needed. Also, make it a habit to check your lights often to ensure all of them are properly working.

A portion of state statutes were used with permission from the Office of the Revisor of Statutes.
