

Runaway June – Thursday, September 5

It's that sound. You know it – the unmistakable sound of three voices in harmony, a harmony that rings back to the early days of Country music, of singing on a porch on a summer's day, of singing just for the joy of it. That's the sound of Naomi Cooke, Hannah Mulholland, and Jennifer Wayne – a.k.a. critically-acclaimed Country trio, Runaway June.

"We all love Bluegrass and traditional Country music. That's been all of our hearts," says Jennifer. "It's what we love singing every single night, and it's the backbone to all of our songs." With the sparest of instrumentation and the gloriously rich three-part vocal line that put Runaway June on the map. Their songs share one defining non-musical component as well: an intense, lived-in honesty from three women who've earned their scars as well as their victories. "We want to touch people and make them feel like they're not alone— to be as honest and authentic as possible so we can find the people who relate to us," explains Hannah. "Every song has to resonate as true."

It seems like such a simple – and, yes, honest – dream: to raise voices in song and solidarity for an audience who wants to listen.
