

- THE WILD HOG OLYMPICS -

Side-splitting Wild Hog Olympics

TERESA VILLARREAL

The huge, fan-favorite Wild Hog Olympics are back!

Talk about “wild”... these games are supercharged with hilarious, crowd-pleasing games that are bound to make you laugh until your cheeks and stomach hurt.

Beginning at 3 p.m. at the American Legion Arena on Saturday March 9, athletes/ participants will be competing in a series of contests that will challenge the mind and body to its very limits, and all done with a devious twist. The entrants won’t be working with animals. They will be working with real people instead!

people instead of wild hogs taking part,” event hosts proclaim of the upcoming games.

All teams are made up of four members, all of them representing teams who have registered for the Wild Hog Cook-Off. The challenges imposed upon them are daily activities that a rancher or farmer would struggle with, but with interesting, sidesplitting twists. Muscle and brawn, courage, and a little bit of craziness are the order of the day if one wishes to be crowned the winner.

The “Human Sack Race” encourages entrants to stuff someone in a sack (not gently) and a volunteer will then attempt to run across the arena without dropping the sack all the way to the finish line.

The “Shovel Race” is quite the spectacle. A team member is seated on the scoop of a manure shovel that proceeds to be pulled at speed throughout the arena. The winner must hang on for dear life! Muscle, balance, and a tough pair of underpants are the key to succeeding in this challenge.

The “Tug of War” is a riotous game of muscle and brawn against the fluffy and strong.

The “Wheelbarrow Race”, a crowd-favorite, allows for participants to help their buddies out by rolling them across the finish line by any mean possible. Let’s just say, safety isn’t an issue.

The winners take home a trophy and bragging rights to one of the most entertaining and uproarious “Olympic” games in South Texas.

It’s a “Can’t Miss” event, so mark your calendars!
