

that tractor,” she laughed as she drove passed a sunflower field. “I have a lot of respect for my boss. He shows up, does the hard work, he started this and did it right.”

Craig’s hard work is evidenced in not only the maintenance of the land but the facilities.

Since purchasing the ranch the Del Rio owners high-fenced the entire property, placing underwire and snares under the fence in an effort to keep out feral hogs and coyotes.

The extra thought and time has deterred coyotes and the ranch has not one hog on the property.

That is right –no nuisance feral hogs.

“The bottom line is, if you want to be successful it is important to be a part of it, and the Wilson’s do just that.”

Managing a lucrative ranch that lures in hunters from across the state is not an easy job; however, the Wilson’s and Caitlin have managed to do just that. Their diligence and hospitality is evidenced in the ranch’s ability to attract the same cliental year after year.
