Favorite thing .... Banana nut bread. I don't cook much anymore, but I do enjoy making (and eating) banana nut bread. My recipe makes one regular loaf or three small ones. I make 3 small loaves, keep one and give the other two away. Recently I was given some "homegrown" walnuts and my banana bread tasted so much better!

Groups Turn Old Abortion Centers into Pro-life spaces. January 22, 2020 is the 47th anniversary of Roe v. Wade, the horrendous decision by the U.S Supreme Court that made abortion legal in all 50 states. In these 47 years over 7 million unborn babies have been killed. If abortions were done in the open there would be (or should be) outrage at the barbaric procedures used to take a tiny unborn baby's life. But abortions are performed in buildings, often with bars over the windows and behind locked doors.

Pro-abortion activists promote abortion as "women's health", because that sounds much nicer than "abortion", or "killing an unborn child".

In at least 20 cities pro-life groups have taken over abortion facilities, including Planned Parenthood buildings, where women have received this "health care." The buildings have been repurposed and are now pregnancy centers, pro-life offices or memorials. Let me tell you about a couple of these "creepy, filthy" buildings where abortions took place.

Troy Newman of Operation Rescue described his first impression of the old Women's Services building in Wichita, Kansas as dusty, moldy, "stinks to high heaven." The building had old carpet and stained walls. The recovery room featured 1970's recliners, where hundreds of women sat bleeding after their abortions. "You wouldn't let your dog sit in these things."

Newman said the sink between the procedure rooms had a "super powerful" industrial strength garbage disposal. Abortionists used that disposal to get rid of babies' remains. A plumber said the drain was clogged for about 10 feet with "biomatter" which Newman said was the "old, rotting, decomposing flesh" of aborted babies.

In 2014, Greater Toledo House of Prayer bought a former abortion facility, demolished it and built a memorial park for the unborn on the site. On her first day in the building, Denise Emerine, GTHOP founder, saw a hospital gown on the floor, dried blood in the examining rooms and a basement closet full of abortion vacuum equipment. "It was like a slaughter house .... It wasn't like walking into a doctor's office with everything crisp and clean," she said.

Abortion is a huge business in our country. It's not women's health; in fact, abortion is detrimental to women's health. Many women are unable to conceive after an abortion, many suffer from depression, guilt and other mental problems. Abortion is all about making money by killing innocent, unborn babies.

On January 22, let's pause and remember the millions of tiny, precious babies that died by abortion. As Christians, let's be more active in sharing the truth about abortion and helping pregnancy centers. We could also contribute to pro-life organizations that are on the front line, working to protect the lives of precious, innocent unborn babies.

Focus on the Family has excellent pro-life resources. A video series tells how to express pro-life views in winsome ways. We can become equipped and ready to share the truth about abortion to a world that desperately needs it. Focus also has an great book, "The Case for Life" by Scott Klusendorf.

More Simple Formula for Living: Take time to be alone. Cultivate good manners. Be humble. Realize and accept that life isn't fair. Know when to keep your mouth shut.

Go an entire day without criticizing anyone. Learn from the past. Plan for the future. Live in the present. Don't sweat the small stuff. It's all small stuff. Pray daily. Trust God.

One more thing, when I read this story to Barney, he just shook his head and said, "That's a dog for you." "Canine Catastrophe. Firefighters in Essex, England are blaming a dog for a small house fire. Emergency crews said the blaze began when a husky managed to turn on a microwave while its owner was away. The homeowner used the appliance to store a loaf of bread. The homeowner spotted the fire while checking on the dog via a video app. Fire crews were able to put out the fire before it spread beyond the kitchen. No one was hurt in the fire and the dog escaped unharmed."

In closing, Barney Cat says, "Don't wait for everything to be perfect before you decide to enjoy your life." We thank our "perfect" readers for reading our column. Till next week.

Penske Makes Changes to its Lineup

Penske Racing's three-car operation with drivers Ryan Blaney, Brad Keselowski and Joey Logano all advanced into the playoff round of the schedule with the opportunity to run for the season title in 2019. When the field was trimmed to four drivers after the final elimination race at Phoenix, none of the Penske drivers had advanced as one of the Championship 4 that would run for the championship the following week at Homestead.

Penske's strong stable of drivers and talented crew chiefs started the season as one of the organizations to beat for the title as it took five of the first fifteen checkered flags. It was the kind of start that any organization would want but after a hot start to the season, it only was able to make one trip to victory lane over the remaining 21 races of the season.

Penske like the rest of the series had to sit and watch as Joe Gibbs Racing dominated the sport not only in the regular season but the 10-race playoff portion of the schedule that eventually crowned the series champion. The Championship 4 that competed for the title was made up of three JGR drivers. Kyle Busch who went on to win the title was joined by teammates Denny Hamlin and Martin Truex Jr. in the four driver field

Once the season was over, Penske like every other organization that competes in the series began to look for ways to strengthen its individual race teams which in turn strengthens the competitive performance of the entire operation. Penske decided that maybe the best way to increase its performance was by changing the pairings of its drivers and crew chiefs.

So many times once the season is over, owners look outside of their organization for a new crew chief but in Penske's situation he had three of the more talented ones already inside of his building. Peter

Wolfe had been Keselowski's crew chief for nine seasons and together was considered one of the more successful combinations in the sport. The two had posted 29 wins together and won the series title in 2012.

Keselowski and Wolfe are not the only championship crew chief/driver combinations at Penske as Joey Logano and his crew chief Todd Gordon won the title in 2018. Those two had been paired together for the last seven years and had made 21 trips to victory lane together. Jeremy Bullins had been crew chief for Blaney at the Wood Brothers before the pair moved to Penske.

Next month when the season gets underway at Daytona those pairings will just be a distant memory as Wolfe will be taking over the crew chief duties for Logano's No. 22 team. Taking over the crew chiefs duties for Keselowski's No. 2 car will be Bullins while Blaney's No. 12 team will be led by Gordon.

Crew chiefs are not the only team members that will now be wearing a new uniform this season at Penske. The road crews and pit crews will also be making the move with the crew chief that they worked with during the 2019 season.

PIT NOTES: The competition at the short tracks of Martinsville, Bristol and Richmond in the past has always produced some of the best racing on the entire schedule and this season it may be getting even better. NASCAR is expected to make some tweaks to its short-track rules package which could include changes to both the spoiler and splitter areas. Last season's introduction of the high-downforce aero package hurt the racing on the short tracks and this could be the move that increases the number of passes that are being made which in returns makes for a more enjoyable race for the fans.
