A few of Mrs. Kimbler's 4th Period Journals

Mrs. Kimbler's Classes Created Journals about the novel Holes

Amy McGowan and Emma Grider, RCMS student reporters

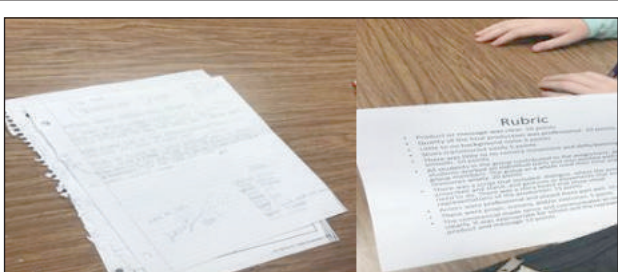

Students in Mrs. Kimbler's 4th and 5th periods recently read the book Holes and created journals about the popular novel. In their journals, the class included the vocabulary from the novel, using a strategy that utilized listing, grouping, and labeling the unfamiliar words. They also included studies of the characters, summaries of each chapter, illustrations, and worksheets they did relating to the book.

The book Holes is about a boy named Stanley who has a curse that was placed on his great-great grandfather. Stanley is wrongly convicted of a crime and sent to Camp Green Lake. Here, Stanley, along with other boys, are forced to dig large holes in the dirt every day. The boys feel there is something suspicious going on with the camp directors and the camp in general.

The students enjoyed reading the novel, and the journal assignment really helped them learn more about the elements of the novel.

Mrs. Rachel Miller's Classes Worked Hard on Advertisements!

Amy McGowan & Emma Grider, RCMS student reporters

Students in Mrs. Rachel Miller's classes designed unique commercials to showcase a product of their choice. These students were very intrigued about designing and filming their own work of advertisement.

Students studied the history of advertising, which became popular in the early 1900's. The largest platform businesses then were newspapers or any kind of print advertisement, which are still used today. However, the class also learned that the format of advertising certainly has changed drastically over the years, especially when televisions became mainstream. Most recently, advertisements once again changed, as the use of social media became a daily part of people's day to day life.

Students presented their commercials, and through the process of creating and sharing, learned the challenges of persuasive advertising.

Pythagorean Theorem

Emma Grider and Amy McGowan, RCMS Student Reporters

Chelsea McGowan's classes recently completed drawing projects that represented the Pythagorean theorem. The students first learned the concept of the Pythagorean theorem, which is one of the best known mathematical formulas. It provides us with the fundamental relationship between the sides of a right triangle. After gaining an understanding of the theorem, they demonstrated their mastery with the project.

The class created spirals that incorporated right triangles to show the relations. They could choose any image to show off their creativity. The rubric allowed for points for creativity and color, but the math had to be correct to earn full credit. What a fun way to show off what they learned!

Russell County Schools Board Members & Superintendent Michael Ford

School Board Appreciation Month

Cheyenne Popplewell
The Times Journal

January was School Board Appreciation Month and I sat down with some of the Board Members Monday Night before the School Board Meeting. We had a wonderful meal catered by Mrs. Nancy Stephens and her husband Tony Stephens. Nancy is a retired teacher from the Russell County Schools and Tony is a preacher at Cross Creek Church. Among eating with all of them and laughing, getting to know them, they discussed with me the reasons they were a board member and what they enjoyed.

Brenda Higginbotham and Sheila Wicker told me what they had done that day. The board members went to Salem School and played Family Feud, men vs. women, and the women won so they wanted to get that out of the way first and foremost. We were sitting with board member Richard Kazsuk and he was laughing about the fun they had during the game. The board members told me how much they really enjoy being involved with the schools and students. Richard (Dick) told me he had worked in the system for almost 32 years and he just can't get away because he likes it so much.

Shelia also told me that for some reason everywhere you go the board members get fed. We all laughed, as we all enjoy being fed a good meal. Gerald Murray agreed with everything they said above and said he also likes taking a stance for the students when no one else will. Joy Wilson said the main thing she enjoys is just being involved. She said she had grandkids in the school system, and she is always looking for something to make a positive attribute in all students life and she hopes to be a part of that.

Here at The Times Journal we thank The School Board Members and appreciate everything each of you do!
