Empathy

"Get rid of all bitterness, rage and anger, brawling and slander, along with every form of malice. Be kind and compassionate to one another, forgiving each other, just as in Christ God forgave you."
Ephesians 4:31-32 NIV

Empathy is the ability to understand what another person is experiencing, and it is arguably the quality most important to the survival of our species. It allows us to care for the helpless, whether they are newborns, the infirm or the aged among us. Empathy is for most of us closely tied to tribal and family connections; we are naturally more empathetic towards our immediate family and members of our tribe, whether that tribe is an ethnic group, a political party or a nation-state. People usually find it easier to empathize with their native countrymen than with foreigners. And therein lies a potential problem, that is, we can sometimes overlook the needs of others simply because they don't look like us or speaking the same language, or have the same beliefs. In short, empathy can be parochial, and then rather than being a positive trait that encourages pro-social behavior it becomes a source of division. Try to inculcate the better angels of your nature by seeking to understand others, especially those who are radically different, and remember that love unites while hatred divides. Empathy and tribalism can work together as long as we realize that the tribe we belong to is humanity.
