Nobody really knows if we'll play football in 2020, but history might give us a hint

my mind, would be if the football season is simply delayed by a month and begins in early October when it ought to be starting anyway. August/September football has become an exercise in misery, particularly in the Deep South where temperatures on the field often are well over 100 degrees. Just start it later and play through December, I say. Move the bowl games back.

Meanwhile, college basketball coaches are recruiting over the telephone and learning all about FaceTime. They are giving "virtual tours" of their campuses.

And baseball coaches are trying to manage their rosters, which will be bursting at the seams in 2021. The NCAA has given 2020 seniors an extra year of eligibility. Meanwhile, Major League Baseball is talking about limiting its upcoming draft to just five rounds. That means fewer high school players will be drafted and more will go to college. Fewer college juniors and seniors will be drafted and will hang around and play another year of college baseball.

The talent level in college baseball next season, whenever it is played, will be the highest it has been in the history of the sport. That will be fun when it happens. If it happens.

It's all up in the air right now. Meanwhile, we need for people to do what the experts are telling us to do. Stay home. Stay safe. And hope for a vaccine, sooner rather than later.

History tells us – history from 102 years ago in 1918 tells us – we will get through this.
