

Butler council to delay new ordinance policies

■City holds work session to discuss changes to ordinances

BUTLER – The Butler City Council held a special work session last Thursday morning aimed at updating city ordinances and discussing the hiring of a separate officer to handle enforcing the updated codes.

All council members and Mayor Mike Williams were in attendance at the nearly three-hour session, with City Prosecutor Perry Newton, City Judge Blane Dolbare, and Director of Public Safety Jimmy Huckleba joining the meeting to advise and answer questions during the process.

“To start with, we have a great town,” began Huckleba, noting the general need for the work session. “I would love to see our ordinances get stiff enough that we can start right here in the middle and really clean this town up. For instance, if you have junk vehicles or if you don’t cut your grass, lets take care of it. Some of our warnings now take 14 days or more to take effect. By the time we warn you, issue you another citation, and then check back on the issue, your grass, for example, might only end up being cut a couple of times during the summer. We need these ordinance to work so that we can take care of these issues quicker.”

The council agreed, citing other examples of violations like dilapidated buildings, as well as properties that do not keep up with grass cutting and those that contain old tires, appliances, old cars, and other unsightly items.

The council also discussed the issue of golf carts, side-by-sides, and other ATV’s being used on city streets, especially with the recent closure of schools due to the COVID-19 virus quarantine. Having just written a new ordinance for the City of Gilbertown - which has been experiencing the same problem - Newton showed the council the code as an example of an up-to-date, effective ordinance.

“We want to be fair about things, but we also want codes that are perfectly clear,” said council member Ron Mason, surmising the session’s ultimate goal of updating ordinances so that they can be effective tools in ultimately keeping Butler not only clean, but safe too. “These codes need to start with a warning so that we can give people proper notice, then we can move to different fines to take care of problems. They need to be solid, enforceable, and easy to understand. This is for the good of the town, the codes need to be effective for all involved...and, above all, fair.”

“From my standpoint, I think you guys need to just go through and figure out the exact codes you want,” advised Dolbare. “That way Perry (Newton) and I can go and look at the codes in Alabama and figure out what we can and can’t do. And then we can sit down and build these ordinances. But, in my opinion, I think it’s important that you do have an ordinance enforcement officer.”

The council agreed, adding that it has not been effective to have codes and ordinances enforced by current city policemen, which has been the norm for years.

“All of these codes are only as good as your enforcement,” Dolbare added. “The more times you have someone contacting people that are not in compliance, the better chance you have to get that situation taken care of. Also, the officer can keep records to help keep track of each issue.”

Dolbare then explained that the city could levee financial punishments for violators, noting that in Alabama fines can range from $5-$500. Dolbare said that it was up to the city on how to schedule the citation plan and the fine structure. He also added that as long as the new codes were found to be in line with state laws, he, as city judge, and Newton, as city prosecutor, would uphold the codes in city court.

At the conclusion of the work session, the council agreed to postpone any new hires or new enforcement policy until the end of this current Covid-19 virus quarantine. They agreed that the community did not need to be hit with anything that might hurt businesses that are likely already feeling the effects of the current pandemic.
