something we also stock all of the necessary maintenance parts for it.”

The store does warranty work on equipment, tune-ups and maintenance and other service work on the products sold there. Hagan’s even grinds axes for people.

“If we sell it, we service it and work on it,” he said.

In addition to servicing equipment in their shop, Hagens also keeps necessary parts in stock for the person that maintains his or her own equipment. The business offers oil, oil filters, blades and other.

Brands sold at Hagan’s include Stihl, Echo, Husqvarna, Toro, Honda, Kubota, Scag, Badboy and Cub Cadet. Clint said the dealerships sells so many different brands and sizes of equipment so it can fit a person’s needs with the proper piece of equipment.

“We offer something for everyone,” he said. “It does not matter if you rent an apartment or if you own a 500-acre farm; we have something for everybody!”

When the pandemic hit in early 2020, many people started on their own do-it-yourself yard projects. While Hagens does not carry lumber or other such items to build a deck, the store does carry the necessary power equipment for a person wanting to build his or her own outdoor living area, patio or fire pit.

For example, say a couple wanted to build a patio in the back yard, but the ground is unlevel. Hagens rents equipment to help level it out.

“We rent tractors, backhoes, and excavators,” Clint said. “We offer equipment for lawn and landscape work. We rent items for people that want to till up their flower beds, we rent bed re-definers for making a bed edge, and we rent aerators for their yard.”

While the pandemic hurt traffic in many businesses last year, it actually helped Hagens. With so many restaurants, bars and other type of establishments closed for a good portion of last year, people had the time to work on projects around their home.

“Last year was our busiest year that we have ever had,” he said. “Foot traffic through the door was extremely high.”

Clint said Hagan’s started out in 1957 in the basement of current owner Matt Hagan’s grandfather’s basement. His grandfather started out selling chainsaws.

“Chainsaws are still a big part of the business,” he said.

As a third-generation business, the franchise continues to grow. The first store location was in Philpot, and it eventually grew to where they opened a store on Salem Drive. Today a third location exists in Hanson, Ky. Matt Hagan manages the Philpot location, and Clint manages the store on Salem Drive. Robert Blair manages the store in Hanson. For over 60 years Hagan’s has served Daviess and surrounding counties well.

“We appreciate everyone’s business,” he said.
