

Kentucky ranks fourth on School Breakfast Participation

FEEDING KENTUCKY

The School Breakfast Program ensured 304,068 low-income students in Kentucky started their day ready to learn in the 2019-2020 school year, a 3.7% percent increase from the prior year according to the School Breakfast Scorecard, a report released by the Food Research & Action Center (FRAC). Nationally, 12.6 million low-income children received a free or reduced-price school breakfast on an average school day from September through February of the 2019-2020 school year.

FRAC's Scorecard ranks states and the District of Columbia on the rate of participation of low-income children in the School Breakfast Program compared to the rate of participation of low-income children in the National School Lunch Program. Kentucky's school breakfast program reached 68.4 low-income children for every 100 who participated in school lunch. This is close to the ambitious but attainable national guidepost of serving 70 low-income children school breakfast for every 100 who received school lunch in the 2019-2020 school year.

"School breakfast has always been important in the fight against childhood hunger, but this program will continue to be even more critical due to the pandemic," said Lauren Moore, Director of the Kentucky Department of Education's Division of School and Community Nutrition. "To be successful, it requires thinking beyond traditional delivery models and our staff and partner organizations, including Feeding Kentucky, work diligently with Kentucky's sponsors to highlight this."

Kentucky's ranking can be attributed in large part to the widespread implementation of community eligibility, which allows high-poverty schools to offer breakfast and lunch at no charge to all students, and alternative breakfast models that meet kids where they are already learning and congregating, like breakfast in the classroom. These two approaches combined can dramatically move the needle on school breakfast participation.

"School breakfast is one of the best ways to boost student achievement, reduce absenteeism, and improve student nutrition," said Kate McDonald, No Kid Hungry Kentucky Campaign Director at Feeding Kentucky. "We know that when breakfast is moved out of the cafeteria and served in common areas and classrooms, participation in the program increases, and more children reap the benefits. We urge more schools in Kentucky to adopt this approach."

Campbellsville University's online bachelor's, master's programs ranked high in 2021 U.S. News, World Report

Several of Campbellsville University's online programs have been named to U.S. News and World Report's Best Online Programs.

Campbellsville University has been ranked in the U.S. News and World Report for 29 consecutive years.

Campbellsville University was ranked in the following online programs: online bachelor's, Master's in Business Administration (MBA), non-MBA and graduate education.

For the online bachelor's program, Campbellsville University is ranked fifth in Kentucky out of the Commonwealth's private and public schools and second among the Association of Independent Kentucky Colleges and Universities (AIKCU), where the university tied with Asbury University.

This year, the university is ranked fourth out of private and public colleges and universities in the Commonwealth for her online Master in Business Administration (MBA) program and for her online non-MBA business program, the Master's in Management and Leadership, the university is ranked first in Kentucky.

Out of the private and public colleges and universities in the Commonwealth, the university is ranked fifth and second in AIKCU for her online education graduate program.

"During the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic, online courses are no longer just an option for many students – they have become a requirement," U.S. News and World Report said.
