Mt. Salus Christian School preparing students for future

By Mt. Salus Christian School Headmaster Bill Maner

Welcome to Mt. Salus.

As a head of school, one of the main concerns I hear from parents is how are we as a school going to prepare their children for the future.

At Mt. Salus Christian School, our vision is to impact the lives of our students for Christ by teaching them from a Christian worldview. This means preparing our future leaders for a world ahead that needs solid Christian leaders who can think critically and be prepared for the tasks placed before them. We want our students to graduate prepared for what God has created them to be.

Our core philosophy has not changed: college preparatory as well as vocational study need to be aspects of the education of a child in the 21st century. Our goal is to do this and strive to be better at it every year through God's grace.

What will a student that graduates from Mt. Salus look like?

- One that defends the Christian faith from a Christian worldview perspective,
- Servant leaders that understand service from a Biblical context and serve the community,
- Prepared for college academically and spiritually (be able to defend the Christian faith in a secular academic world),
- Prepared for workforce/vocational training—more students are opting out of college or college may not be the path they need to take. We want these students to have the skills to be prepared for the workforce/vocational training. Companies need workers with technology skills: computer, robotics, software, etc. In addition, there are skill-specific jobs that need skilled workers: electricians, plumbers, carpenters, etc. We need entrepreneurs with business skills for the changing business world.

If you would like to be part of our family and see how we are striving to prepare students for life and not just graduation, I welcome you to give us a call and schedule a visit to be a part of the Mt. Salus difference. This is a journey, and we welcome you.

Seymour visits with Veterans of Foreign Wars members

Special to The Clinton Courier

Senator Mike Seymour recently visited with members of Veterans of Foreign Wars at the State Capitol to discuss legislation that benefits service members.
