Can Wisconsinites afford retirement in Wisconsin?

By Kristian Finfrock
Special to The Reporter

It's no surprise that many Wisconsinites desire to retire in our beautiful state. But can they afford it? According to a recent study by 24/7 Wall Street, the estimated total retirement spending for a Wisconsin resident is $1,058,902. If this number has you concerned – you have company. The fear of outliving one's retirement savings is a common concern amongst retirees. Below are steps to help you save more for retirement.

Step 1: Estimate Retirement Expenses

Estimating retirement expenses can be difficult – no one knows what healthcare, inflation or taxes will be in the future, not to mention how long you'll live. One popular estimate is 80 percent of your former expenses, but this should be used as a starting point because individuals often underestimate how much money they will need in retirement.

Step 2: Maximize Retirement Accounts

Consistently contribute the maximum amount of funds to your tax-favored retirement account or participate in your company 401(k).

Step 3: Catch-Up Contributions

Individuals who already hit the big 5-0 can take advantage of "catch-up" contributions.

Step 4: Be Strategic

The closer you are to retirement age, you may want to shift risky investments into conservative investments. It's also wise to review your finances annually to look for additional opportunities. For example, can converting a traditional IRA to a Roth save you money in taxes? Can investing in a tax-advantaged health savings account (HSA) help save for health-related expenses (dental care, hearing aids or prescription eye exams) that Medicare and supplement policies don't cover?

Step 5: Social Security

Social Security has over 500 claiming options. Strategically choosing when and how to take your benefit can significantly boost retirement income.

One of the most common reasons individuals are alarmed by the amount to retire is that many people think of retirement as accumulating assets and forget that they have to live off that nest egg. It's never too late to start saving for retirement, but the older you are when you start saving, the more aggressive you have to be to achieve your financial goals. But first, you have to start!
