For the month of September Mrs. Goodwin's class focused on responsibility as their trait of the month. They had many discussions on how to be responsible at school, home, and public places. They talked about how they could work on being more responsible in some areas and what areas they are already strong in being responsible. The class ended the month with a 24 hour challenge. After reading "Horton Hatches the Egg," each student got an egg they were responsible for keeping safe for the next 24 hours. Ten students were able to successfully complete the challenge!

HENRY

She said that the story took a long time to write and publish because she and the other storytellers wanted to tell Goose's story properly. In addition, Henry created a coloring book for readers to go through as they read Goose's story. She said the inspiration came to her when her great-grandson, Lucas, was born, as she wanted something for him to be able to enjoy and follow along with in her book. Henry said, "We can all learn something from Goose. He had nothing, yet he had everything. He did not earn his rewards in life because he was wealthy or earned higher degrees. He earned them all because he opened his heart to those around him and shared his life with them."

In her introduction, Henry says, "As authors of his book, we hope to tell you how much we enjoyed

"Goose" with our memories of him and how animals are a passion in all our lives. Our strong friendship and love for Goose, Patience, their goose family, and their duck friends have created a bond between them and us-their human friends. Because of this bond and our love for Goose, we have formed a group that we now call "Friends of Goose." God's plan for Goose's life brought us all together. He opened our eyes to the love of animals, nature, and friendships that we would never have had without him. He touched our lives and changed us all for the better. We hope our words convey the amount of love that we still have for our "Goose."

"The Amazing Chinese Goose" and coloring book can be purchased from Amazon. The book is also available at the Tuscola Public Library, Camargo Township District Library, the Campaign Public Library, and the Urbana Free Library.
