Mason Hargrove sat still and quietly in the front window of the coffee shop.

The sun shined brightly and warmly through a large, plate glass window.

He squinted - one eye covered with a patch.

"hot," he said in almost a whisper.

In mid-conversation, his parents quickly and instinctively looked to, and reached for their son.

"What baby, what do you need?" his mother said.

"Did you say you were getting hot?" his father asked

Mason nodded, and his father helped him from a chair.

"thank you," Mason softly said as he was moved to a nearby, comfy couch.

It was a simple, oblivious gesture, but it said everything about Mason and his parents.

Caring.

Concerned.

Compassionate.

MASON,

Russell County native Scott Sullivan is an executive producer/writer for the streaming smash "Reacher" on Amazon.

"Reacher" Puts Scott Sullivan in Spotlight 'I'm just a Russell County boy who worked hard, took a big chance, and got very, very lucky'

By Wade Daffron

It's almost as if Scott Sullivan's life has been a dress rehearsal for this very moment.

His journey is well-known, and has been cheered on along the way by his fellow Russell Countians.

People know "different" Scott Sullivans.

The jaw-dropping magician who never failed to excite and delight.

The man behind the mic on morning radio who when assessing local news, couldn't pass up the opportunity to convey colorful commentary.

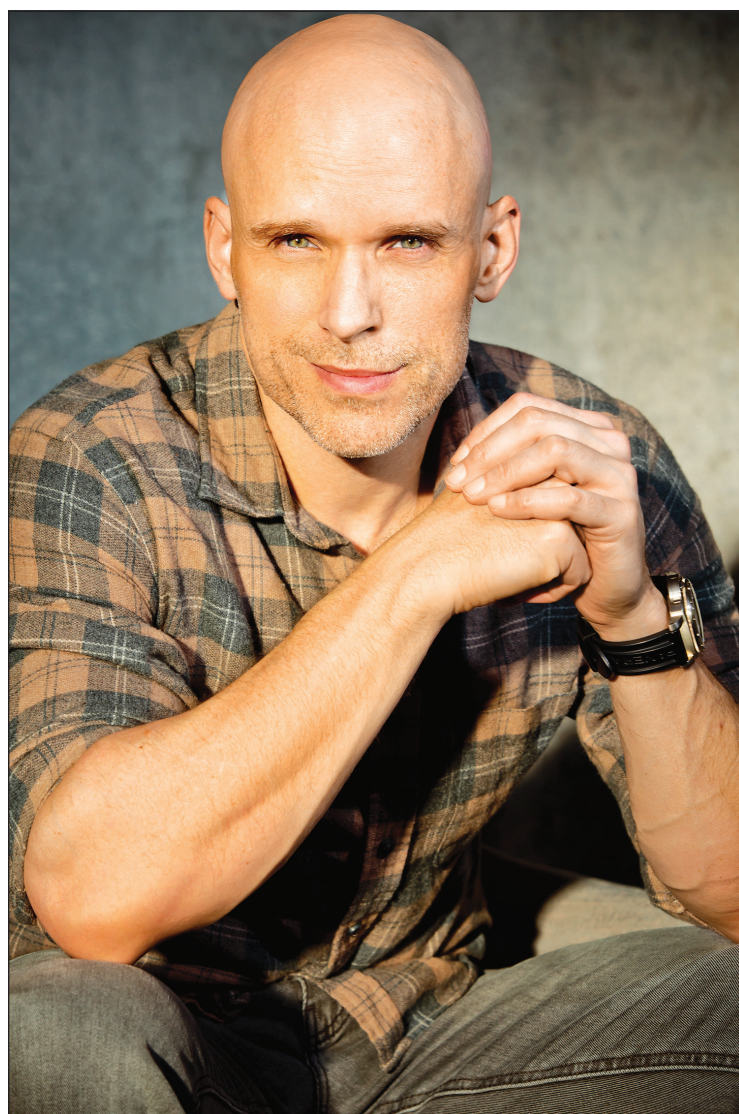

The stand up comic with the wry smile, sharp wit, and steely blue eyes...eyes that looked beyond the crowd to something...something out there...perhaps his future.

And that's where we pick up his awe-inspiring story...

Russell County's own Scott Sullivan, son of Garris and June Sullivan, (Long-associated with Young's

They've been together on the front line in the battle against COVID.

Brothers and sisters in a battle like none we've ever seen.

Through it all - the long hours, the struggles, the unfortunate losses - they still stand.

And when the next call comes in, they'll spring into action like they always do.

With a stellar reputation

RCH/EMS,
