Take the Illinois ag needs survey

Farming is changing. It's hard for everyone, small farmers and commercial producers alike, to keep up with the latest research, changing climates, emerging pesticide resistance, and new crop varieties all while trying to stay healthy and productive.

For more than 100 years, University of Illinois Extension has worked with agricultural communities to empower them to meet challenges with confidence. Now, you can be part of the future of farming in Illinois by taking a few minutes to share your thoughts with Extension researchers online at go.illinois.edu/AgNeeds.

"This survey will help us get an accurate picture of what our agriculture stakeholders' needs are," says Katie Bell, Illinois Extension local foods small farms educator.

Extension agriculture educators regularly ask those working in the agricultural industry about their concerns and use the feedback to develop trainings for the public on emerging topics and develop research projects that address gaps in current understanding of crop sciences.

"Knowing what our farm communities are thinking about helps us prioritize what research projects our scientists can focus their efforts on so we can then share accurate information that our stakeholders can trust," Bell says. The survey is anonymous and open to all Illinois producers and agriculture industry professionals now through March 2022. It will take 10 to 20 minutes to complete.

For more information about the survey, contact Bell at (618) 687-1727 or klbell@illinois.edu.

Learn How Legislation Impacts Local Governments

Recent changes and potential changes by Illinois state legislation impacts county and local governments. University of Illinois Extension and the Illinois Association of County Board Members will host a free informational webinar at 11 a.m. Monday, Jan. 24.

Presenters include Kelly Murray, IACBM executive director, and Taylor Anderson, legislative expert and liaison to the Illinois General Assembly. An opportunity for questions follows each presentation.

Register online at go.illinois.edu/LGE2022. If you will need an accommodation in order to participate, please email Nancy Ouedraogo, esarey@illinois.edu. Early requests are strongly encouraged to allow sufficient time to meet your access needs.
